CHURCH LANDS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,

my committee room for Senate Document No. 190, which relates to lands held for ecclesiastical or religious uses in the Philippine Islands, etc. The copy of the document which I hold in my hand is the one now in existence in the Capitol. I ask that a thousand additional copies of this document be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the cost?
Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, it will not be much. It will be very small.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let us have more of them.
Mr. GALLINGER. They will cost but a small amount.
Mr. COCKRELL. I know the document, and there is a great demand for it. We had better have printed the number which will be embraced within the limit that we can have published for the use of the Senate—$500 worth.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should be very glad to have a larger

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Senator an estimate of how much it will cost?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not an estimate, but it certainly will not cost very much. A small amount will print a thousand. Let us compromise and make it 3,000.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that we have as many printed as can be printed for $500.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, I will make the request in that way, that an edition costing not in excess of $500 be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that there be printed of the document which he sends to the desk a sufficient number of copies, not exceeding in cost the sum of $500. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN OF SENATE.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint an assistant librarian of the Senate, at an annual salary of $2,000, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

ELIZABETH K. PRESCOTT.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth K. Prescott, widow of William H. Prescott, late an assistant engineer of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allow-

ASYLUM FOR ANARCHISTS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if he shall deem it practicable, to enter into negotiations with other civilized countries to the end that a convention may be made, in accordance with the terms of which some island, or, if that can not be done, some other suitable territory, may be set apart to which, under due precautions, and after fair and proper trial, persons found guilty of attempting or instigating or counseling the overthrow of all governments, or of criminal attempts upon the life of chief magistrates or high officials of such governments, may be transported, and to which they may be confined.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for the use of the committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund

PRINTING OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That of the bill (S. 1348) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, for the common defense, to promote commerce, and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies be printed for the use of the Senate and 500 copies for the use of the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS OF THE RULES.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer a resolution proposing certain changes in the rules of the Senate. The changes proposed are not organic;

but as the resolution is quite long, I think it had better be printed in the RECORD, so that Senators may look over it without taking the time of the Senate to read it now. I therefore ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Rules.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved. That the standing rules of the Senate be amended as follows: Rule I, clause 4: After the words "Vice-President" insert "or of his accession to the office of President." Rule VII, clause 2: Strike out the words "or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived."

Rule VII, clause 2: Strike out the words "or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived."

Clause 4: After the word "debate" insert "when petitions and memorials are ordered printed in the Congressional Record the order shall be deemed to apply to the body of the petition only, and the names attached to said petition or memorial shall not be printed unless specially ordered by the Senate."

Rule VIII: After the words "otherwise order," in line 2, insert "the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate resolutions, if any, coming over under objection from a previous day, in the order in which they were submitted, and the Senate will continue the consideration thereof until 2 o'clock. Any resolution then under consideration not finally disposed of shall take its place at the foot of the Calendar of that day. If there be no such resolutions, or, if the consideration thereof be concluded before 2 o'clock."

At the end of the second clause add "unless otherwise ordered, the morning hour shall terminate at the expiration of two hours after the meeting of the Senate."

Rule X, clause 1: After the words "unless there he profiticled by the second clause and "unless there he profit he defined by the second clause and "unless otherwise ordered, the morning hour shall terminate at the expiration of two hours after the meeting of the

At the end of the second clause add "unless otherwise ordered, the morning hour shall terminate at the expiration of two hours after the meeting of the Senate."

Rule X, clause 1: After the words "unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day" strike out the remainder of the clause and insert "in which case the unfinished business shall have precedence. Whenever at any time subsequent to the date fixed for a special order the regular order shall be disposed of, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate the first case on the Calendar of Special Orders, which shall become the regular order unless changed by direction of the Senate."

Clause 2: After the words "severally assigned" strike out the remainder of the clause and insert "but no subsequent special order shall be made which shall antedate any order on the Calendar of Special Orders unless by unanimous consent."

Rule XIII, clause 1: After the words "actual session thereafter" insert "enter a motion to reconsider or."

After the words "Every motion to reconsider" insert "or that may be entered to reconsider."

Rule XIV, clause 3: In line 2, after the words "twice read," insert "by title," and in line 5, after the words "and twice," insert "by title only."

Clause 3: At the close of the paragraph strike out the words "and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill." Rule XXII: After the words "motions relating to adjournment," in the last paragraph, insert "except a resolution of the House of Representatives."

WATEREE AND SANTEE RIVERS, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer a concurrent resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause an examination and survey of Wateree and Santee rivers, South Carolina, to be made, with a view of providing a navigable depth of 6 feet at dead low water, and an estimate to be submitted of the cost of the same.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. The object which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has in view is apparent; but I should like to know whether it can be attained by a concurrent resolution? Is it not a part of the law of the land that surveys must be ordered by joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; concurrent.
Mr. ALDRICH. Then I beg the Chair's pardon.
Mr. TILLMAN. I am merely following the precedent set for me by some of my friends on the other side of the Chamber, who have had passed a half dozen such resolutions within a week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The law relating to this subject was amended a short time ago.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.
Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the President in his message has called the attention of Congress to the important subject of irrigation. More than two-fifths of the area of the United States is arid or semiarid and requires irrigation to make it productive. The streams throughout the arid region as a rule flow through different States, and it frequently happens that the waters of one State must be used for irrigation, power, and other domestic purposes in a different State. There is no tribunal provided by the United States or the States where interstate water rights can be adjudicated. I have introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the judicial power of the United States to controversies respecting the right to the use of water, except where the water and the use thereof are in the same State. The following is my resolution:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring jurisdiction on the Federal courts in controversies respecting the use of water, except where the water and the use thereof are in the same State.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as part of the

The judicial power of the United States shall also extend to all controversies in law and equity relating to the use of water, except where the water and the use thereof are in the same State.

The use of water for placer mining in California became a leading subject for the courts of that State fifty years ago. It was necessary in the prosecution of placer mining to divert the waters of the streams throughout the mining region by means of ditches and canals and convey it miles away to the mining locality where it was to be used. After experience, deliberation, and much discussion, the supreme court of California held that the right to the use of water depended upon appropriation for some beneficial purpose and its uninterrupted use for such purpose. The decisions on this subject would fill volumes. The same prin-The decisions on this subject would fill volumes. The same principle was decided long ago by the other mining States and Territories. Subsequently, when irrigation became an important interest, the principle of acquiring the right to use water by actual appropriation was applied to that subject. In short, the same principle has been applied for nearly fifty years to the use of water for mining, irrigation, and other domestic purposes.

On the 26th of July, 1866, Congress passed an act declaring that—

Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same, and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Basey and others vs. Gallagher and others (20 Wallace, 670), referring to this statute and the decisions of the courts, indorsed the doctrine of prior appropriation as applicable to the courtry composing the mining and arid region. Many, in fact most of the streams throughout the so-called arid region flow through different States, and it frequently happens that the water of one State is used for mining, manufacturing, or agricultural purposes in another State.

When the water and the use of the same are in the same State, the State courts have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions pertaining to water rights; but where the stream flows through several States and where the water is in one State and through several States and where the water is in one State and the use of it in another, there is no court having jurisdiction. It is true that in a limited number of cases, where all the parties interested on one side of the question reside in one State and those on the other side of the question reside in another State, suit may be brought in the United States courts. But these cases are extremely rare, and as a rule there is no court, Federal or State, having jurisdiction of these interstate water rights.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator have in mind the use of water for the purposes of irrigation or for power?

Mr. STEWART. For irrigation, power, mining, supplying cities and towns, and all other domestic purposes.

Riparian rights, as understood in the common law, can not prevail in the arid region. By the strict meaning of the terms "riparian rights." the owner of a bank of a stream has a right. "riparian rights," the owner of a bank of a stream has a right to the flow of the water in the bed of a stream adjoining his land. The enforcement of such a rule would bar the use of water for mining, agricultural, and other domestic purposes in the arid region, and if strictly enforced would be very inconvenient in other sections of the country where mechanical power is required and cities and towns are to be furnished with water. It is unnec-essary to discuss the question further as to the right to the use of water acquired by appropriation. That is the law of the arid region, at least. But the want of a tribunal in which to settle region, at least. But the want of a tribunal in which to settle who is the prior appropriator and entitled to the water is prohibitory of many beneficial enterprises that would be undertaken if the rights of the parties could be adjudged by the courts.

Colorado is on the headwaters of the North and South Platte, the Arkansas, the Rio Grande, the Rio Grande del Norte, the Grand, the White, the Yampa, and perhaps others, and people of that State may feel a degree of indifference to the rights of people of other States. But Texas, Kansas, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Idaho, Wyoming, Montana, Nevada, Utah, California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma are all vitally interested in a tribunal where these controversies can be settled. It is a great hardship after persons have appropriated water, built homes, and their rights are protected by the principle of prior appropriation, that a party above on the stream in one State should divert the water and destroy the farmers below in another State.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, this is a very interesting question indeed. In New England we have, of course, no mining claims, but we have the question of taking the water from streams for the supply of cities and towns. For instance, the Connecticut River runs through four States and forms the boundary between two States—New Hampshire and Vermont. It seems to me, however, that this matter can hardly be dealt with without extending the legislative power, or giving the United States tribunals authority, which must, of course, be judicial authority, to administer the State laws as to certain rights, whatever they may be. In general, those tribunals can get that authority now, because almost always, or at any rate in many cases, the parties interested are citizens of different States. I do not see how you could make very important and valuable I do not see how you could make very important and valuable advances in this matter without giving the United States some legislative authority over the use of the waters of streams which pass through more than one State.

Mr. STEWART. That might be very proper, and so far as the Mr. STEWART. That might be very proper, and so far as the Western States are concerned, the principle already established, making the right to use water depend upon appropriation, is all that is necessary. No authority for that purpose need be conferred upon the United States. The State authority over waters entirely within the State is sufficient and need not be disturbed. The State laws remain as they are so far as two-fifths of the territory of the United States are concerned, and jurisdiction in the Federal courts to determine the controversies between appropriators is all that is required and all that I propose in my amendment.

Mr. TELLER. It will be necessary to amend the Constitution to confer such power.

Mr. STEWART. Of course, there is no other way to do it but by an amendment to the Constitution. There is no power to give the Federal courts jurisdiction of interstate water rights except by an amendment to the Constitution. It is a very similar quesby an amendment to the Constitution. It is a very similar question to the one provided for in the Constitution, which provides that the judicial power of the United States shall extend to controversies "between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States." These interstate water rights are very similar in character to interstate rights derived through grants from different States. There is no doubt if these controversies had existed at the time of the formation of the Constitution that the Federal invisibilities would have been excitively tion that the Federal jurisdiction would have been originally extended to them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. Can Congr

Mr. STEWART. Mr. TILLMAN.

The power of Congress can only be extended by a constitutional amendment?

Mr. STEWART. Of course it must be by a constitutional amendment, and that is what I propose. It can not be done otherwise.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is exactly what I was endeavoring to get at. I did not hear the Senator's joint resolution read, and I could not understand how we could extend the power except by an amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. STEWART. I propose by my amendment that "the judicial power of the United States shall also extend to all controversies in law and equity relating to the use of water, except where the water and the use thereof are in the same State."

I have made these preliminary remarks in the hope that the Committee on the Judiciary will take up this subject, because I am certain that it is the most important question relating to the West, so far as developing irrigation is concerned. I know personally of many instances where irrigation projects have been inaugurated and abandoned because of the difficulty of settling these interstate rights. I hope the committee will give the subject the consideration which it deserves. I also hope that the committee will not be deterred from investigating this question and providing a tribunal in which to settle interstate water rights by any fear that it involves appropriations by Congress, although I heartily approve of the recommendations of the President that Congress aid irrigation in some practicable way, to the end that the vast regions of the West may be utilized by making homes for millions. I do not connect this proposition with that subject. Private parties must settle their disputes before they can succeed, with or without the aid of the Government, in utilizing the land susceptible of irrigation.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it worth while to debate this question now. There is but a very remote probability that the amendment will ever be adopted. I simply wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not believe there is any necessity for this or any other amendment of the kind.

OTH CAROLINA INTERSTATE AND WEST INDIAN EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. DEPEW. May I make a report, out of order?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, in the absence of objection.

Mr. DEPEW. I am instructed by the Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 15) to encourage the holding of the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition in the city of Charleston, county of Charleston, State of South Carolina, during the years 1901, 1902, to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution is in accordance with the recommendation of the message of the President of the United States. It appropriates $75,000 for the purpose of transferring and installing all the Government exhibits which were at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo to the exposition which is now in progress at Charleston, S. C. All the other national expositions have received large appropriations, but none whatever has been given, nor has the Government yet extended any help to the exposition at Charleston. I have been to the exposition there and have been to all the others, and it compares favorably with any of them. It is an admirable exhibit of the enterprise and energy of the people of Charleston and of South Carolina. I trust that the joint reso-

Intion will be now considered and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution just reported by him from the Committee on Industrial Expositions. The joint resolution will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Expositions. The joint resolution will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to encourage the holding of the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition in the city of Charleston, county of Charleston, State of South Carolina, in the years 190, 1802, to fittingly illustrate the marvelous industrial and commercial development of the Southern States during the last quarter of a century, and to contribute to the expansion of American commerce in other lands and among the islands of the southern Whereas the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition Company has undertaken to hold such exposition, beginning on the 1st day of December, 1901, and closing on the 1st day of June, 1902. Therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be exhibited at the said exposition by the Government of the United States from its Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, the Department of Labor, and the Sureau of the American Republics such articles and material as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace and its resources as a war power, tending to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptation to the wants of the people. And to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit a board of management shall be created, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, six the Several Departments and Fisheries, the Commissioner of Labor, and the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics may respectively decide shall be embraced in said Government exhibit. And the whole or such parts of the United States Government exhibit. And the whole or such parts of the United States Government ward to the discretion. The President may also des

SEC. 6. That the appropriation herein made of $75,000 shall take effect and become available immediately upon the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amend-ment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. PRESIDENT, I rise to a question of personal privilege, for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the published statement that I have been excluded from the caucuses of my party, and hence would be without assignment on any committee. If that were true I would be greatly hampered in the discharge of my duty as a Senator of the United States. If this action had none but a personal effect I would not call the attention of the Senate to it; but it deprives the people of the State of South Carolina of an important part of the duties of a Senator and the Senate itself of that assistance which it was intended that I should render.

The only notice that I have ever had was last spring, before the adjournment of the Senate, when the chairman of the national committee, in the cloakroom, inquired of me why I had not recently been attending the caucuses of the party. I replied that I differed so widely with the majority of my associates on the questions growing out of the Spanish war that I had remained away from a delicacy of feeling, fearing that my presence would embarrass the deliberations. I suspected no ulterior motive or purpose, but when he replied, "Then it would be less embarrassing to you not to be invited to the caucus?" I saw at once what he meant, and replied, "Certainly," and rose from my seat and walked away.

This is the culmination of a controversy with which I can not charge the Democratic party, but fasten upon those in whose hands the leadership of that party has, I hope, been temporarily placed. It is far-reaching in its effects, and unless understood it can not be thwarted, and unless thwarted it must to some extent injure the entire country. It is for this reason that I ask the indulgence of the Senate, and request that the Senators follow the history of this matter closely.

The surface view is that it is a fight against me by the Demonstrator of the senators of the senators of the surface view is that it is a fight against me by the Demonstrator of the senators of the sena cratic party. If this was the case I would remain silent and fight my own battles, but the inside history will show it to be a concerted action on the part of some for the purpose of keeping alive a sectionalism which ought to be but a sorrowful memory, and its tendency, I fear, is to array section against section in the personal interests of a few men to the detriment of all other men. Our section is being rapidly emancipated from the shackles of poverty and prejudice, forged by the reconstruction following a grapel war and knowing its brave lovel and intelligent people as cruel war, and knowing its brave, loyal, and intelligent people as I do, I have no fears as to the result when the true facts become known.

For many years past the people of the South have realized that in national legislation they did not secure their just proportion of the benefits, while bearing more than their proportion of the burdens of this Government. We have in times past made the mistake of indulging in invective rather than argument, and condemned the people of other sections instead of pointing out the remedy and trying to effect a reasonable adjustment by which the rights of all sections should be preserved. As the race ques-tion begins to be solved and the South from an agricultural section develops great commercial and industrial enterprises, the people are naturally beginning to divide in thought, as do the thinking people in all other sections. If this should occur the political career of some of the present leaders would be at an

They could see Samuel J. Randall speak and vote in favor of a protective tariff and yet support him as a Democratic candidate for the Presidential nomination. They could support General Hancock, who called the tariff a merely local issue; they could indorse Senator David B. Hill, even, after he voted against the income tax, because those views, while diverse, did not endanger certain leaders.

But when a Southern man tried to obtain for his section a portion of the benefits of a tariff law that could not be defeated, and called upon the South to secure. if possible, its just dues, not by wordy harangues, but by reasonable compromises, some men fearful that their occupation would be gone if the people began to think for themselves instead of acting upon prejudice aloneare ready to humiliate and crush any Southern man who dares to think and reason for himself upon these great public questions.

In my State we have but one political party, and inside of that party we have a primary system, which is regulated by law. Under that primary system we have the widest latitude of thought and freedom of discussion. This has been forced upon us by the peculiar conditions which have existed since the war.

I have repeatedly stated on the stump and elsewhere that all I and I have repeatedly stated on the stump and elsewhere that all I wanted was an opportunity to go before the people of South Carolina and present my views to them upon the great public questions of the day, and let them pass upon them. I have said, and I say again, that if they think I am wrong I am perfectly content to stop right there and let my political career end. But I claim that as a right. There is no Republican party in South Carolina as you understand a party elsewhere and so long as the Carolina as you understand a party elsewhere, and so long as the rights which we enjoy under our primary system are unabridged and left open there is no necessity for any other party in that State. This is all that it means. To me freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and liberty of action are worth more than a cost in the State.

seat in the Senate or any office under this Government.

On March 23, 1897, I made a speech while a member of the House of Representatives, which was the beginning of this whole controversy. The Dingley bill was under consideration, and I spoke in part, as follows:

In looking into the matter-The Dingley bill-

I discovered enough to convince me, at least, that the interests of the laboring and producing classes of the South had to a certain extent been sacrificed. I imagined that I detected the fact that the enthusiasm and heat of debate, together with an intense opposition to the policy and principles of protection, had caused us to forget or neglect to demand a just reciprocity for our own people when at the beginning, as now, we fully realize that any and all opposition will fail.

I said that, under such circumstances, whatever consideration was given to Southern interests came almost without a demand and was always of such a character as to interfere as little as possible with interests in the North and East.

I went on then to say:

As Democrats, we have denounced the doctrines of protection and declared that the protected industries of the North and East were robbing the balance of the nation. Believing this to be true, and knowing that in spite of all our efforts for thirty years this doctrine still continues in operation, is it wise, is it just to our people not to demand fair play for our section? Must our own people suffer because of our obstinacy or pride? Let us demand equal privileges for all the products of the South, to the end that, if the tariff is robbery, our own section will cease to be its only victim. If protection really brings higher prices, as we claim, let the people of the South realize that fact when they market their cotton, sugar, tobacco, rice, lumber, etc.

The South needs new factories and other business enterprises to

The South needs new factories and other business enterprises to develop her resources and manufacture her raw material. requires money to do this, and money she has not, neither will she ever have until she stops selling her raw material at a loss and buying the finished article back from New England at a high

I made the statement in the House-and I little dreamed of the storm it would create—that I was not discussing the question from a theoretic or philanthropic standpoint, but was simply demanding equal rights and a full share for my own section of all the benefits which might accrue from legislation, whether such legislation accorded with my political creed or not

I went unexpectedly into a campaign for the Senate (where I went unexpectedly into a campaign for the Senate (where under our primary system every man has a right to vote directly for the candidate of his choice) with that speech as my platform. My Democracy was immediately attacked, but the people indorsed me by a large majority at the primaries. I outlined in that campaign what I thought, in a general way, was the proper policy for a Southern representative to pursue, and so far as I have been able I have followed that general course in the United States Senate. The people were thinking for themselves, which did not suit certain leaders and from that day until this in South Carolina suit certain leaders, and from that day until this in South Carolina there has been conducted against me a campaign of calumny, falsehood, and trickery never equaled in the history of American politics.

If this was directed against me only I would not thus bring the matter before the Senate, fully realizing that this body is not interested in any personal political conflicts; but it has been used against two Presidents of the United States, and as a citizen of the United States, as well as a Senator, I protest against the dragging of the honored office of the Chief Executive of the nation into local political squabbles.

The principal charge made against my Democracy is that I was bought by the patronage of President McKinley, and renewed a contract of sale for myself under similar terms with President Roosevelt. Having the highest degree of confidence as well as a feeling of personal admiration for both, it is unnecessary for me to say that neither of them ever stooped so low as to bargain the public service of the country for any such ignoble purpose. It is true that an unfortunate condition existed in South Carolina under which President McKinley did not have confidence in the patriotic purposes of the recognized leaders of his party in that State, and that therefore, to some extent, the arduous and unwelcome work of selecting applicants for position was thrown upon me. If I had for one moment attempted to abuse this confidence by using it simply for my personal advantage, it would have been and ought to have been withdrawn. It was natural, where it was left to me, to choose a friend instead of an enemy.

After my election to the Senate the Democrats in both branches of Congress insisted upon a declaration of war against Spain. The President did his utmost to avert this, but, actuated by patriotism and laying aside all partisanship, the appropriation for the war was made and war was declared. The same spirit which demanded of me that I should vote to inaugurate the war under the Administration called for me to give that Administration my heartiest support in the conduct of the war. I deprecated any division between the political parties as to this matter, and still believe that it should have been wholly nonpartisan; and I know proceed that the political parties of the then President personally that such was the noble purpose of the then President of the United States. Where it was possible I secured the appointment of a Democrat; where it was not, the best Republican available, to the end that our people might have a good Federal Administration. I wanted no more such horrors as burning post-masters, like the one at Lake City.

I was thrown somewhat closely in contact with the President during this war, and never did I hear a word from his lips concerning party advantage or disadvantage in connection with that subject. He was a broad American statesman, a patriotic citizen, and a Christian gentleman. Why, then, should I not agree with him as to the measures which he intended not to benefit his party, but to restore peace and prosperity throughout our common country?

The Democratic party has always claimed to be the party of the whole people and the true exponent of liberty and equality. The Democratic party has condemned the Republican party on the charge of seeking to create an aristocracy and destroy the true purposes of the Republic. In these latter days certain party leaders have made the mistake of trying to array class against class, and thus sought to establish an aristocracy in which these leaders should be the chief aristocrats. These class distinctions are detrimental to the best interests of our country, and have no proper place in a Democratic platform. To array class against class in the hope of securing fancied social and financial equality is to sow the seeds of anarchy and breed strife and discord in our

The United States Senate should be controlled by justice and reason, and here, as in no other deliberative body, should the widest and most nonpartisan expression be allowed upon grave public questions. It has seldom been the case that either great political party has ever been able to align all of its members upon any great public question, and it will be a sad day for this Republic when this is no longer true. Democratic freedom of speech has been honored and held sacred by every political party which has elected members to the Senate of the United States. I am at a disadvantage by being compelled to form my conclusions as to the charges made against my Democracy from the daily press.

In a general way, through the newspapers, I learn that I am charged with not having opposed the cessation of hostilities between the United States and Spain and the perpetuation of the conflict between these nations. I am further charged with assisting the Administration in its policy to bring about a peaceful culmina-tion of our difficulties in the Philippines. I am further charged with favoring an army sufficient in size to bring about an end the sanguinary warfare which has been waging in those islands. I am also charged with favoring the upbuilding of our merchant marine. These are all the charges that have been made against my Democracy, and the charges are true, and I glory in their truth. I did not wish to vote against my party on any of these truth. questions, and had it not been for the reopening of hostilities in the Philippines I would have deferred to the judgment of recognized party leaders and even voted against the treaty of peace.

But I was not in favor of prolonging the conflict between the United States and Spain, and I have never for a moment brought my mind to regret that that conflict has ceased. I am in favor of giving the Philippine Islands the best government and the largest independence possible under all of the circumstances. I am not in favor of foreign ships continuing to carry over 90 per cent of our exports.

The Democratic party has always been the party of free speech fair play, with a love of justice and equality, and yet in all of the votes taken upon these serious questions, as to which men's minds would naturally and honestly differ, I find that Republican wotes have been recorded against the propositions which I have advocated and Democratic votes in favor of those propositions. I see no effort on the part of the Republican party to discipline or exclude the revered senior Senator from the State of Massachusetts, the honored Senator from the State of Maine, or other Senators of that party who were not in accord with the position taken by a majority of the Republican Senators.

The United States Senate is supposed to be a deliberative body. Its decisions upon any subject should not be controlled by prejudice or partisanship. Its mission is to improve and conserve the interests of the States and of the whole people, and this is the first attempt in the history of the Senate for a political organiza-tion to so control legislation that it makes it a condition precedent that a Senator shall vote in accordance with caucus dictation or else be subjected to party discipline.

When the two political parties meet in caucus and compel their members to vote according to the caucus, then it makes it in the power of the majority of a majority to compel legislation, which a majority of the Senators elected and holding seats would oppose. It transfers the legislative power from the United States Senate to the majority of the majority of the dominant party in that body. There is no necessity and no utility in discussing a subject upon which every Senator's vote is compelled upon one side or the other by a political caucus. Such a precedent would completely destroy the entire purpose of the Senate, deprive it of its character as a deliberative body, and forever throttle free thought or free speech.

I would regret to see that the party to which I am attached by association and heredity make a mistake so gross and obvious as to go before the people with a proposition that free thought and free speech should have no place in the Senate of the United States, and there should be no policies except those of the dominant party expressed in their caucuses, held in dark rooms, hidden from public view, and participated in by none who oppose the schemes of the leaders who call the caucuses. We all know that a Senate caucus in either party is dominated by less than half a dozen men. When we have no other than partisan legislation, and the dictates of reason and conscience are stifled by the lash of the party whip, then government of the people through their representatives becomes a mockery and a delusion.

I also wish to protest in the name of the people who in part I have the honor to represent, and to whom, and whom alone, I owe an accounting for the trust confided in me. I do not owe an accounting to a party caucus nor to the gentleman who, during the past six years, has so ably guided the Democratic party to its destruction and buried it in national campaigns under an avalanche of popular disapproval. I owe an accounting to the people of my State. I owe an accounting for my official actions to the Senate, of which I am a member. Either of these accountings I am of which I am a member. Either of these accountings I am ready, anxious, and willing to make. The gentlemen who have officiated over the downfall of the Democratic party and who now offer to crucify all who would resurrect the true principles of Democracy from the mire into which they have fallen have no jurisdiction over my conduct as a Senator of the United States.

In 1892, in common with some of the Representatives in Congress elected that year from the State of South Carolina, I was elected on a platform in which I pledged myself not to be bound by party caucuses on financial questions or other issues involving the good of the whole country. Hence it will be noted that I came into public life with the express instruction of the people of South Carolina to use my own independent judgment. The instruction of independence which I received when I was elected to Congress has never been withdrawn, and my entire life as a Representative in the other House of Congress and a Senator of the United States has been spent under this instruction from my people. To those people, and none other, I am ready to give an accounting. I have no desire to wound the feelings or to criticise the honest opinions of any man, no matter how he may differ with me upon a public matter. But, in the name of Democracy, I enter my protest against any action by its leaders which will bring it into disrepute and make of it, instead of a party for the upbuilding of a great Republic, a party in favor of a petty country, jealous of growth and fearful of every great national enterprise. It is not the democracy of the past, but some strange organization which has brought an honored name to use as a shroud for a defunct and dishonored political mob. I am a Democrat, proud of the fact that under Democratic rule nearly every one of our present commercial treaties with foreign powers was negotiated, and that the Republican party, in forty years of rule, has not succeeded in improving the commerical policies of this Democracy.

I am proud of the Democratic party that opened up the doors of China and Japan to the enterprise of our infant Republic. I am proud of the Democracy that, after centuries of failure upon the part of the European nations to suppress the piracy of the Barbary States, compelled those States to stop their thieving by a few well-directed shells from a little wooden frigate. proud of the Democracy under which for forty years our country grew and prospered in commerce, in industry, in wealth, in population, in expanded area, and in the arts and sciences. I am proud of the Democracy that overrode the Constitution, as its leader claimed, when it was necessary to the protection of our people and the extension of our territory. I am proud of the Democracy which, when satisfied that no express authority was given in the Constitution for internal improvements, took the implied authority and built up our common country. Democracy which has made United States history.

I am not proud of the Democracy, nor do I regard it as a Democracy, that, without any remedy to suggest, would so weaken the hands of our Government in the Philippines as to perpetuate bloodshed throughout that archipelago. I am not proud of a Democracy, if Democracy it be, which would allow foreign nations to retain control of our merchant marine. It is no Democracy which denies to its members the constitutional privilege of freedom of speech. It is no Democracy which has an aristocracy so close and exclusive that none are allowed within the party who do not accept the edicts of the leader of the party.

Whenever the Democratic party has appeared before the country without sectional matters being made prominent it has secured the votes of a majority of the citizens of this Republic. It was sectionalism which defeated it in 1860, in 1864, in 1868, and in The mere prospect of a settlement of sectional differences caused it to be successful before the people in 1876, but owing to disturbed conditions it was defeated by an electoral commission. In 1880 the sectional feature was again made prominent through an attempt to quiet it. The nomination of General Hancock, in himself a most excellent candidate, brought about a discussion of the old sectional issues. In 1884 the Democratic party elected its President upon a platform entirely devoid of sectional issues and resembling the platforms of the Democratic party prior to the civil war.

In 1888 the sectional issue came to the front again upon the question of elections in the South, and the result was the defeat of the Democratic candidate. In 1892 the same candidate was elected because he ran upon a straight-out nonsectional platform. In 1896 the Democratic party attempted to array the West against the East and provide a new sectional issue. It was overwhelmingly defeated. In 1900 the same combination was made as in 1896, and the result was the same, only a little more pronounced. The American feeling is in favor of justice, free speech, and equality. This is the foundation of the true Democratic faith. There is especially no room now for any sectionalism in politics.

If sectional feeling is engendered, if class is arrayed against class, it destroys that union of interest and of sentiment which alone can work out the vast possibilities of this great Republic.

Any political party which objects to the prosperity with which a beneficent Providence has blessed our entire country because, perchance, a few individuals obtain a larger degree of that prosperity than is obtained by others, is but trying to deprive us of whatever prosperity we may have. I believe in protecting the interests of the weak and helpless with much greater care than those of the strong and powerful, who are able to protect themselves. But it is not a protection to a protection to selves. But it is not a protection to array these people against those upon whom they are dependent. The Democratic party, when at itself, is not cynical; it is not opposed to progress, it does not take a narrow view of governmental affairs, and those who seek to confine it within these limits are not the friends, but the enemies of Democracy.

I was elected to the Senate from South Carolina by practically a direct vote of the people. I took upon myself certain duties and responsibilities. It is my wish, as well as my pleasure, to carry these out to the fullest extent of which I am capable. This newspaper clipping apprises me that the Democratic caucus desire to take from me the means by which I can properly represent my State. I have no favors to ask from the caucus of either party. Wherever I am placed, I will fearlessly carry out the purpose of my election, which was to give my best thought and most careful attention to matters which came up in the Senate, and to vote in accordance with my best judgment as to what would conserve the

Along the lines upon which the Democratic party act, upon the broad principles of right and justice, and for the best interests of the people, it will be more than a pleasure to me to assist in an humble way in carrying out their plans. There is with me no thought of partisanship in the matter. I do not propose, however, to place myself against a proposition upon which the best welfare of the people depends simply because it is in accordance with Republican policy. I do not propose, if I can control my feelings, to take this matter as a personal affront to the extent of allowing it to warp my judgment or to change my principles. I shall not be swerved from my course of duty by any criticism or opposition from those who claim to be the Democratic party in the

I will not be driven from my party, nor will I be forced into any party where I do not wish to go. The animus of these proceedings is more clearly shown by the fact that of the votes complained of not one was cast in opposition to the principles enunciated in any Democratic platform ever promulgated.

There never was a Democratic platform which declared against the treaty of peace between Spain and the United States. never was a Democratic platform which suggested a plan other than that which is being carried out as to the government of our new possessions. There was never a Democratic platform that declared against the upbuilding of our merchant marine.

The gentleman who so ably guided the Democratic party to ignoble defeat constituted himself a committee on platform for the guidance of Senators as to questions which had never been passed upon by any authorized body or committee of the Democratic

These questions were not in existence at the time of my election and have arisen out of the Spanish to the United States Senate, and have arisen out of the Spanish war. Both political parties were divided upon them. They were matters of the greatest importance and were new to our country. Thinking men disagreed and even changed their minds after having Thinking men disagreed and even changed their minds after having expressed an opinion. The President of the United States, who had the fullest opportunity for knowledge, believed that our plain duty was to give free trade to Porto Rico. He was convinced otherwise and changed his policy. The American people indorsed his change of mind by giving him an overwhelming majority. The United States Supreme Court divided almost equally, and not along partisan lines. Some of the ablest speeches in opposition to the policy of the Republicans were made in the Senate by members of that party.

In the Democratic convention at Kansas City no policy what-

In the Democratic convention at Kansas City no policy whatever was recommended, but the position was taken that "imperialism" was to be avoided.

I do not think there is a Senator of any party who will not agree to this proposition. Upon these questions where strong men are puzzled and only the weak see clearly it is to be expected that men will differ. If this difference unfits them to serve a party and the party demands an absolute uniformity of views, then that party has grown too narrow-minded to be of service in a deliberative

There are brave, honorable men on this side of the Chamber whom I revere and respect. I want them to understand my position, but I am debarred from discussing any but the public phase of this question. There is a personal phase which everyone understands who has kept up with this fight. The floor of the Senate is not the proper place for its settlement. On the great main issues upon which I have passed as a public man, as God is my judge, I have tried to rid my heart of self and follow the dictates of my conscience and judgment. I will bide the result without complaint, and with no bitterness in my heart toward any man who differs with me on great public questions.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Massachubody

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withhold his motion for a few moments.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLaurin] has seen fit, on a proposition with respect to personal privilege, to make some statements about me which I regard as a reflection. I desire to state to the Senate my recollection of what occurred between that Senator and me in the conference to which he has alluded in the course of what he has

After the extra session of the Senate had begun last spring, at the request of a number of Senators I concluded to call a caucus, which I did. The officer who was serving notice on the members of the party came to me and asked me who should be notified of the meeting of the caucus. It was a question in my mind whether or not the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLaurin] desired to be notified of the meeting of the caucus. I went into the cloak-room and saw him, and told him my recollection was that he had not been present in a Democratic caucus for two years; that on most close questions, on party questions, he had voted with the Republican against the Democratic party; that under those circumstances I desired to know whether or not it was his wish to be invited to a Democratic caucus. He replied that his relations with the party were such that he did not feel himself in an attitude to go into the caucus, for the reason that it might be embarrassing. I said, "Then your wish is not to be invited to the caucus?" He answered, "Certainly."

Now, in the course of what he has said this morning he has attributed to me some ulterior motive in this matter. I can afford to treat such things with the contempt I think they deserve, with no comment at all. I have made a plain statement of the facts. My intention in talking with the Senator was simply to find out what were his wishes.

I do not know anything about the newspaper clipping from which he read. It is a notorious fact, I think known to every man in the country except the Senator from South Carolina, that there has been no Democratic caucus at this session; that there has been no action on the part of the Democratic caucus, and that there has been no public declaration, so far as I know, about that Senator's relation to the caucus.

I have no hesitancy in stating that in talking to a leading member on the Republican side about the persons who were to be provided for by the different caucuses, I said there was considerable feeling amongst Democrats, since the Senator from South Carolina did not consider himself connected with the Democratic caucus at all, and that I doubted if the Democratic caucus would be willing to undertake to provide for him on committees, with the idea that he would be provided for by the other side. This was a confidential conversation between myself and one of the gentlemen whose duty it is to arrange such matters on the Republican side. It was intended to be a personal conference between us. I have no objection, however, to its being made public. But I have no ulterior purpose at all in connection with the Senator from South Carolina, and only want the facts to be

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President— Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will indulge me for a moment.

Mr. President, while my name has not been brought into this matter directly, it is very evident to every man here that I am the cause of all this. I shall not at this time make any extended reply, but there are one or two things which I should like to go out along with such parts of the speech of my colleague as the Associated Press shall see proper to send out.

Last April, shortly after Congress had adjourned, my colleague appeared at Charlotte, N. C., as the representative of a new evangel, the teacher of a new Democracy, and in his speech he indulged in criticisms of the party and of its putative leaders, or actual leaders, which could only be taken by myself as directed toward me. I indulged in an interview, in which I called attentions. tion to some facts; and the result of our controversy locally was that we had a joint discussion at Gaffney in May, after he had made another speech at Greenville going more extensively into the blunders and mistakes and miseries and villanies of the party to which he claimed to belong. At that joint debate things took a shape which led to a startling announcement in the newspapers the next morning, that the two Senators from South Carolina had tendered their unconditional resignations, to take effect on the 1st of September.

My reason for giving up a position in this body, which I prize, and which is one of the highest honors an American can attain, was to settle these—in South Carolina—little family differences, if you may term them such, which appeared to exist. I had just been reelected, without opposition, and everybody knew that I was a member of the national Democratic committee; that I had been on the committee on platform at Chicago in 1896, and at Kansas City in 1900, and therefore my attitude on all those questions was perfectly well understood, so I had no occasion to seek an appeal to the people.

"But," I said to my colleague, "If your new ideas are right, and "But," I said to my colleague, "If your new ideas are right, and they are Democratic, having been elected on the Democratic platform in 1897, and you did not then announce to the people that you disagreed with your party, decency and honor demand that you, as a man representing, or claiming to represent, the people of South Carolina and its Democracy, should step down and out and give them an opportunity to pass upon you." In his answer he twitted me with occupying a bombproof; that I had just been reelected for giv years; that I did not propose to stend down and out, and that six years; that I did not propose to step down and out; and that six years; that I did not propose to step down and out; and that it was very easy to lay down a code of morals for some one else to follow which I myself was unwilling to follow.

The result was that I answered on the spot: "My dear sir, I will resign right now if you will, and we will both go to the people and let them decide between us." He accepted, because he did not see exactly how he could help it; but it was very difficult to get him to sign the decument that afterwoon. It was an appear get him to sign the document that afternoon. It was very difficult to ditional resignation, to take effect immediately, as I proposed it and as he accepted it, but after worming around and squirming a while he came to the conclusion that he preferred to have it come off in September.

The document was signed and forwarded to the governor instead of to the Vice-President. If I had known what was going to follow (because I had acted in absolute good faith) I would have sent it to some one who could not have proposed or advised that it be withdrawn, and so that it would have been a finality, so far as our action could make it such. But the upshot of it was that the governor, after consultation with some people, and I shall not designate whom, under some pressure, however, which was not altogether as thoroughly Democratic as I could have wished it to have been, advised that he refuse to accept our resignations, when, as a matter of fact, he was nothing more than a box in which we had posted a letter to the State legislature, announcing our resignations, and to the Vice-President, to announce it to this body

Mr. McLaurin made haste to accept the advice of his friend the governor, and to withdraw his resignation; and as I had only tendered mine in order to let my colleague reach the dear people to whom he says he intended to appeal, and do it at once, there was nothing left me to do but to withdraw mine.

I will say, in passing, that after looking into this matter a little I find that in the one hundred and twenty-five years of our national life something like 200 Senators have tendered their resignations, and that he occupies the enviable height of being the only one who ever thought he had the right to withdraw his resignation of the he had once sort it in. But this is reither here resignation after he had once sent it in. But this is neither here nor there. I come down to the "conspiracy," which he alleges has been hatched against him.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones], who is the honored chairman of the national Democratic committee and one of its leaders, at whom my colleague sneers—I am one of them, too—has explained just what occurred. I did not happen to be in the city when that caucus was called. I left here the night of the inauguration. I went home. I did not attend the extra session of the Senate. I had no conference with anybody in regard to party action. I had no dream that there was going to be a convey which would deal with enviting more than core little caucus which would deal with anything more than some little trifling matters of no party moment. I said to the Senator from Arkansas before I left, "If anything comes up in which you want me, I can reach you in sixteen hours. All you have to do is to wire."

So the conspiracy which my colleague's dreams have conjured up is but the creation of his own brain, so far as I am concerned; and I do not see why his colleagues here—these other Democrats, these poor, God-forsaken, demoralized cowards, whipped creations of the control of th tures—should fret much about him. They are in the minority, anyway. The ulterior purpose that he claims to exist, of discrediting him at home, is at least not to be laid at my door. I shall at some future time, at my leisure, refer again to this matter. I had hoped to have an opportunity last summer to appeal to the jury at home. I put my six years in the Senate against his eighteen months, and was willing to sink or swim by the vote of the people of South Carolina. I do not want to represent them unless I can do it honestly and decently.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President—

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President—
Mr. HOAR. I desire to put a question to the Senator's colague. But I will wait until he gets through.
Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. The Senator from Massachusetts can proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I will wait.
Mr. TILLMAN. You had better let us get through. Of course it is interesting. We can carry it on ad libitum.
Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have no desire to say, and I carefully refrained in my opening remarks from saying, anything which could be construed into a personal attack upon any Senator. When in reference to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones], I used the words "ulterior purpose," I thought I was justified in saying what I did. But I am perfectly willing to accept his disclaimer.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have not disclaimed anything. I have merely contradicted it; that is all.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. I accept the amendment with sincere admiration for the dignity, courtesy, and manners of the Senator from Arkansas, and will not say anything more upon that line.

In reference to the remarks of my colleague as to the speech which I made at Charlotte, I will state that it was at a banquet, and I did not intend those remarks to have a personal application fo any particular gentleman. As he has seen fit to apply them to himself, he is perfectly welcome to wear the cap if it fits him.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question, and I desire to say something before it is answered. Does he understand that the resignation of a seat in this body can be lawfully withdrawn? As I understand the law, although I do not profess to have any special knowledge of it, there is not in the legislative practices or rules in this country anyone who has a right to pass upon the question of a Senator's or a Representative's resignation. Any act of laying down the office vacates the office.

That was distinctly held in the House of Representatives by Mr. Blaine in regard to a Representative from the State of South Carolina. Mr. Blaine gave, I think, an elaborate opinion, in which he said that the English notion that a legislative office could not be said that the English notion that a legislative office could not be resigned was expressly overthrown by the phrase inserted in our Constitution for that very purpose, that if the office were vacated "by resignation or otherwise" a certain thing should happen, and that it was not in the power of any official, whether the presiding officer of one of our legislative bodies or the governor of a State, to keep a man in office against his will.

Under our constitutional arrangement there are some offices to which a person holding another office can not be elected. Therefore, a hostile officer who had the power of passing upon the resignation might keep a person out of an office that he himself wanted to enter upon. I have no desire, of course, to interfere with the title to his seat of either of the Senators from South Carolina, with both of whom I hope and believe I am on the most good-natured terms. But I can not understand for the life of me how the Senator from South Carolina who spoke last but one, or the Senator from South Carolina who spoke last, has the slightest title to address this body or to occupy a seat in it if their statements are correct.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if I had supposed that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee could have persuaded his party to hold that view I should have brought up the matter, or had some of my colleagues on this side bring it up, on the first day this session opened and had our seats declared vacant, because there is nothing I would enjoy more than to have this family washing done at home. But I did not believe that the governor had the power referred to. I said in my letter, "If it be lawful to do so." I am not in the category of ignoramuses who know nothing about the law or never studied anything about it. I said in the withdrawal of my resignation, "There seems to be nothing left for me to do but to withdraw mine to if it he lawful to left for me to do but to withdraw mine, too, if it be lawful to do so."

I had hoped that somebody here would take up the matter, and that these two seats from South Carolina would be declared vacant, and we would either have two Democrats or two Republicans sent here, and not have our votes crossed and one killing the other by reason of this new-fangled doctrine that my colleague has discovered.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. I would most cheerfully unite with my friend in requesting the committee to do that very thing, and I am perfectly willing to meet him anywhere, in any Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask—
Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TILLIMAN. I hope the Senator will not let this little thing pass. My colleague has thirteen months more to serve, and I am anxious that he shall have either a full term of six years or that anxious that he shall have either a full term of six years or that he shall have none. This is no mere bluster or braggadocio on my part. I will unite with my colleague if he will draw up the paper and tender his resignation to the President pro tempore, and that will end it. Do not let us have the Committee on Privileges and Elections pass on it, but write out the resignations and send them to the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and that will entitle it. settle it.

Mr. HOAR. When I was myself a member of the House of Representatives—and I believe the two gentlemen who sit in front of me, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison], were members at the same time and will remember the occurrence—a member from the State of South Carolina was under investigation for some alleged misfeasance in office. He was a Republican Representative, I will say in justice to the party of the Senator from South Carolina. A resolution for his expulsion was pending.

He rose in his seat, and, in order that he might make his speech and at the same time not have the resolution passed, when he rose he sent his resignation to the Chair, intending to finish his speech and then have the Chair announce the resignation, so as to cut off a vote on the resolution of expulsion.

Mr. Speaker Blaine instantly announced that he could not be permitted to proceed, and that his seat was vacant; and either then or within a day or two afterwards he made the statement to which I referred just now, that under the American practice there was no one authorized but the holder of an office, certainly of a legislative office, to determine the question whether he could resign it or not. I can not myself see how there can be any great doubt about that proposition. Certainly the governor of a State can not keep a man in the Senate against his will. Certainly the Vice-President of the United States or his successor, when that office is vacant, can not keep a man here against his will. He has no authority over it.

So there is certainly nobody having the authority to pass on the question of accepting resignations, unless it be the Senate itself. and if that were required, a man might be kept in the office of Senator against his will for six months or eight, after an adjournment of the Senate. Therefore, if the Senator from South Carolina has stated the facts correctly in all respects, I think it is, at any rate, a very doubtful question whether there be any Senator at any rate, a very doubtful question whether there be any Senator from South Carolina on this floor at the present moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am glad to find that my intuition or instinct in regard to legal questions has such profound backing. I did not believe that the governor had anything to do with it. As I said a little while ago, he was nothing more than a box, in which we had posted a letter to the legislature and to this body. I am glad to find that so distinguished an ornament of this body and of the hear express with my legal asymmetry.

a box, in which we had posted a letter to the his body. I am glad to find that so distinguished an ornament of this body and of the bar agrees with my legal acumen.

My colleague can solve it, he can cut this Gordian knot, by writing another resignation, although I do not see how we can resign if we are already out. Probably we had better have the Committee on Privileges and Elections take up this matter; and if the Senator will prepare some kind of a paper or memorial or any kind of a document which I can sign which will vacate my seat along with his, I wish he would do it. I do not want to represent the people of South Carolina here unless I represent them honestly, and I would not have the seat with a hundred million dollars attached to it if I were to come here and disgrace my State.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, while those resignations are preparing, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 10, 1901, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, December 10, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved. LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. CROMER, till after the Christmas holidays, on account of important business. To Mr. Blackburn, for four days, on account of important

To Mr. Eddy, for two days, on account of important business. WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. OVERSTREET, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of William Allen, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was À bill (S. 632) to continue the Industrial Commission until February 15, 1902;

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 15) to encourage the holding of the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition in the city of Charleston, county of Charleston, State of South Carolina, during the years 1901 and 1902.

position at Buffalo for the purpose of exhibition at the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition at Charleston, S. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of eleven Senators be appointed on the part of the Senate, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House, to consider and report by what token of respect and affection it may be proper for the Congress of the United States to express the deep sensibility of the nation to the tragic death of the late President William McKinley, and that so much of the message of the President as relates to that deplorable event be referred to such committee.

And that in compliance with the foregoing resolution the President pro tempore had appointed as said committee Mr. Foraker, Mr. Allison, Mr. Fairbanks, Mr. Kean, Mr. Aldrich, Mr. Nelson, Mr. Perkins, Mr. J. K. Jones, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Cockrell, and Mr. McEnery.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House was

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of dredging and otherwise improving the mouth of the Nooksack River, to the end that during freshets the water of said river may be enabled to pass freely into the waters of Puget Sound without overflowing the surrounding country. Should a further examination prove that it is not practicable to remove the accumulated débris from the mouth of said river, the Secretary of War is hereby directed to submit estimates of the cost of opening a new channel for the mouth of said river.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 3.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause an examination and survey of Wateree and Santee rivers, South Carolina, to be made, with a view of providing a navigable depth of 6 feet at dead low water, and an estimate to be submitted of the cost of the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

On December 6, 1901:

H. J. Res. 36, allowing the importation free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, of all articles from foreign countries, and the transfer of foreign exhibits from the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo for the purpose of exhibition at the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition at Charleston,

SPECIAL EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to

House resolution 28.

House resolution 28.

Resolved, That during the Fifty-seventh Congress, and until the organization of the Fifty-eighth Congress, Isaac R. Hill be authorized to act as special employee of the House of Representatives, and receive a compensation at the rate of $1,500 per annum.

That Ewing C. Bland and Felton B. Knight be authorized to act as special messengers of the House of Representatives, each to receive a compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum; and

That James F. English be authorized to act as special chief page of the House of Representatives at the rate of $900 per annum, and $500 additional for services as pair clerk.

Said officers shall at all times be under the direction and control of the Speaker of the House, and they shall be subject to removal for cause at any time by him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask a question. Does this resolution propose to allow to these gentlemen the same salaries which were paid in the last Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And the resolution proposes to grant to the minority of the House the same number of employees that were granted in the last Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Just the same number. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say it is proposed to allow to the minority a colored boy by the name of Alfred Scott. I have a resolution applying to him which I would like to offer now, in order that both resolutions may be considered together.

This is the same boy we have had on the minority side of the House for at least one Congress—two Congresses, I am informed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I would prefer to look into the last resolution. I do not object to the one already read, but I desire to look into the other resolution which the gentleman proposes to offer. I think that the employee it refers to has been provided for in the regular way.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. He has not been. This employee has always been put on the roll in this way. It was done in the last Congress by a resolution at the beginning of the session. He has been put on to wait on the minority members in the same way that a similar employee waits upon members on the Republican side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] that last year, just before Congress adjourned,

[Mr. Hemenway] that last year, just before Congress adjourned, there was a resolution reported from the Committee on Claims—
Mr. HEMENWAY. I have no desire to object, but it is my impression that the gentleman spoken of is taken care of in the regular way by legislation enacted at the close of the last Congress. If he is not, there will be no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am willing to reserve the second resolution if the gentleman so desires.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Maddox] represents the minority side in the Committee on Appropriations. We will look into the matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Very well; I will reserve that resolution for the present. I ask action on the resolution that resolution for the present. I ask action on the resolution that has been read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution which has just been read?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CANNON. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 27.

Resolved, That authority is granted to print and bind, for use of the Committee on Appropriations, all documents deemed necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by said committee during the Fifty-seventh Congress.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report another resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 26.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or such subcommittee as they may designate, shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the House during the Fifty-seventh Congress and during the recess.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

APPOINTMENT AND COMPENSATION OF HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the special committee appointed at the close of the last Con-gress to inquire and report concerning the appointment and compensation of employees of the House.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

Under the following resolution, adopted by the House of Representatives, Fifty-sixth Congress, February 28, 1901, namely—

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee consisting of 5 members, not more than 3 of whom shall belong to the same political party, and all of whom shall be members-elect of the Fifty-seventh Congress, whose duty it shall be to frame and report to the next House a bill to regulate the appointment of and payments to the employees of the House of Representatives."

the Speaker appointed James A. Hemenway, Vespasian Warner, Chester I. Long, F. G. Newlands, and John W. Maddox, Representatives-elect to the Fifty-seventh Congress, as such committee. Previous to the adoption of said resolution and the appointment of the committee thereunder, the House, by an order, authorized the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to make certain changes in connection with the operation of said bill as affecting the officers and employees of the House. Acting under the power thus conferred, an extended rearrangement and classification of the employees of the House was made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and in the same connection important legislation was also enacted in that appropriation bill designed to correct abuses referred to in the report of a special committee of the House, of which Hon. W. H. Moody was chairman, and which was submitted to the House and printed in the Record February 28, 1901.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, in their statement to the House concerning the changes they had made with reference to the number and compensation of House employees and the legislation they had engrafted on that bill, said:

"The management the second of the second of "The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagree-ing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial ex-penses submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, namely:

House carpender, which for the past variety months have amounted $24,000 will likewise be avoided. These three sums aggregate $24,126.14, or nearly $3,000 more than the whole proposed increase reckoned on the basis of a year.

"The new positions provided for are: One cabinetmaker at $1,200, and 2 cabinetmakers at $900 each, under the Clerk; 5 messengers at $1,000 each, and 10 pages at $2.50 per day each during the session, under the Doorkeeper, and 20 janitors to committee rooms at $720 each.

"The following new provisions of law applying to the service of the House are proposed:

"The library of the House of Representatives shall hereafter be under the control and direction of the Librarian of Congress, who shall provide all needful books of reference therefor. The librarian, two assistant librarians, and assistant in the library, above provided for, shall be appointed by the Clerk of the House, with the approval of the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and thereafter no removals shall be made from the said positions except for cause reported to and approved by the Committee on Rules.

"Hereafter employees of the House of Representatives under the Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster shall only be assigned to and engaged upon the duties of the positions to which they are appointed and for which compensation is provided, except that in cases of emergency or congestion of public business incident to the close of a session of Congress or other like cause an employee or employees may be assigned or required to add in the discharge of the duties of any other employee or employees, and in the discretion of the Doorkeeper not more than one folder may, if necessary, be assigned to do clerical work under the direction of the foreman of the folding room, but all assignments made hereunder shall be without additional compensation and shall not constitute the basis of a claim therefor.

"It shall not be lawful to appoint or employed as a page in the service of the House of pages.

"The Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster shall make certificate each month to their respective pay rolls, stating whether the persons named in such pay rolls and employed in their respective departments have been actually present at their respective places of duty and have actually performed the services for which compensation is provided in said pay rolls, and in each case where a person carried on such pay roll has been absent and has not performed the services in whole or in part for which payment is proposed, the reason for such absence and for such nonperformance of services shall be stated.

"The violation of any of the foregoing provisions of law shall, roon ascertainment thereof, be deemed to be cause for removal from office.

"It shall be the duty of the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives from time to time to inquire into the enforcement or violation of any of the foregoing provisions of law; and for this purpose they are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and they shall report to the House at least once every session their compliance with the duty herein imposed.

"And hereafter packing boxes for the use of the House of Representatives shall be procured after advertisement for proposals therefor, under specifications to be prepared by the Clerk of the House, and from the lowest and best bidder to furnish the same."

In view of the many changes as to number and compensation of employees thus provided for and the importance of the legislation referred to, and of the fact that there has been neither time nor opportunity to fairly test the efficacy of either, your committee have determined that it would not be wise to immediately prosecute any further investigation or to initiate other legislation until a reasonable time after the reorganization of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

The committee have learned of beneficial results coming already from the reforms which have been initiated.

The committee ask leave to further prosecute their labors and report to the House at any time during the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HEMENWAY. By direction of the committee, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 25.

Resolved, That the committee appointed February 28, 1901, to report on the appointment and compensation of employees of the House is hereby continued during the Fifty-seventh Congress, with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this report? [A pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the report and proposed resolution.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. May I be allowed an inquiry? I understand that no legislation is recommended at the present time by this committee.

Mr. HEMENWAY. None at all. Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. But the proposition is that, without further action at this time, opportunity be allowed for the reforms adopted in the legislative bill of last session to develop themselves ?

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the object.
Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman whether, in view of the provisions of the legislative bill, there will be any occasion for dealing with employees on the deficiency bill, as we have done heretofore.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think not.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That is now fully provided for by existing law, and I believe there will be no occasion for any employee to come in here properly and ask an increase of his compensation on the deficiency bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the evil we have tried to avoid, and we hope that we have succeeded.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. One more question: One of the evils which were developed in the hearing last year was that of absenteeism. As I understand, the legislative bill provided for a record of the presence or absence of employees of the House.

What has that record developed during the summer months?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has resulted in the employees staying

Mr. HEMEN WAY. It has resulted in the employees staying at their posts. Great good has resulted, as members will see if they will go to the House Library or other parts of the House.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Allow me to say that I hope every member of the House who was a member of any former Congress will visit the House Library and observe what has been the very healthful influence exerted by our investigation and legible. islation. I believe with the gentleman from Indiana, that the legislative bill which crept through in the closing hours of the last Congress without much attention has really worked an important reform. I believe it wise to continue this committee, and wise for us to wait at least a few months before taking further action, so that we may see what the experience will be under the operation of that legislative bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report and accompanying resolution.

The report and resolution were agreed to. On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the report, with appendices in three parts, of the Isthmian Canal Commission, established under section 4 of the river and harbor act, approved March 3, 1899, of its investigations made in pursuance of section 3 of said act. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 4, 1901.

ADJOURNMENT TILL FRIDAY NEXT.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that when the House adjourn to-day, it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the following resolutions; which were considered by unanimous consent, and adopted:

House resolution 23.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

House resolution 24.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS FOR CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

Mr. PAYNE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 19, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 6, 1902.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I present the following report. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, presents a report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session as relates to the revenue, the bonded debt of the United States, and the treaties affecting the revenue be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

That so much as relates to the foreign affairs, the consular and diplomatic service, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That so much as relates to the appropriations of the public revenue for support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for pensions, for the District of Columbia, and for all deficiencies, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That so much as relates to the judiciary of the United States, to the administration of justice, and the organization of courts, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

That so much as relates to banks and banking and the currency be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That so much as relates to the mints of the United States and to the coinage of gold and silver bullion be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

That so much as relates to the commerce of the United States, domestic and foreign, except so far as it affects the revenue, to intercolonial railways and cables, and the Isthmian Canal, be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

That so much as relates to the mintain eand propriations therefor and to forestry be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

That so much as relates to the military establishment and appropriations therefor be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

That so much as relates to the military establishment and to the construction of additional vessels for the Navy, and apropriations therefor be referred to the Committee on th

That so much as relates to pensions be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

That so much as relates to the irrigation of arid lands be referred to the Committee on the Irrigation of Arid Lands.

That so much as relates to labor be referred to the Committee on Labor.

That so much as relates to the militia of the several States be referred to the Committee on the Militia.

That so much as relates to the civil service be referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

That so much as relates to foreign immigration be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

That so much as relates to the census be referred to the Committee on the Census.

That so much as relates to the centennial of the Louisiana Purchase and to proposed expositions (excepting matters relating to the revenue and appropriations) be referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions sitions.

That so much as relates to the Library of Congress be referred to the Joint Committee on the Library.

The committee recommend that the resolution pass with an amendment by inserting on page 2, line 2, after the word "justice," the following words: "to the punishment and prevention of crime;" also, on page 4, after line 14, the following: "That so much as relates to the affairs of the District of Columbia, excepting appropriations, to the Committee on the District of Columbia."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the President's message and House resolution No. 17, for the distribution of the same, be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the President's message and the resolution just read be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution for the distributing of the President's message. It contains some additional items of reference, because some additional items of interest have been added to the President's message this year. There are two amendments reported by the committee, one relating to that portion of the message referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. As the resolution was originally drawn it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary so much of the message as relates to the judiciary of the United States—the administration of justice and the organization of the courts. There is some question whether the words "the administration of justice" embrace specifically the portion of the message referring to anarchy. Therefore an amendment is incorporated, also referring to that committee so much as relates to the punishment and prevention of crime.

In drawing the original resolution the part relating to the District of Columbia was omitted, and hence there is an addition to the resolution in the form of an amendment, that so much as relates to matters pertaining to the District of Columbia, excepting appropriations, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Now, I do not know that there is any desire for debate this morning, except on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow], who desires to occupy a portion of time. I do not know how it is upon the other side of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the distribution made, it provides, in respect to the Committee on Insular Affairs, that all questions relating to the islands lately acquired, all insular matters, shall go to the Committee on Insular Affairs, except certain things.

Mr. PAYNE. Except so much as relates to the revenue and the appropriations.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Those matters do not go to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. PAYNE. Those matters would go to the Committee on Ways and Means and to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman what will be left for the consideration of the Commit-gentleman what will be left for the consideration of the Committee on Insular Affairs when you except those two items?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I can imagine that there are a good many things that will be left to that committee. For instance, some legislation, in my judgment, is necessary for the Philippine

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Legislation not involving taxation nor revenue?

Mr. PAYNE. Outside of taxation and revenue.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That may be. I simply want to call attention to that fact, in order that if gentlemen who represent that committee desire to debate the proposition they can do so.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman's position. I could go into details if it were necessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no disposition to interfere with the matter. It does not concern me.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. SHATTUC. The portions of the President's message which relate to the exclusion of anarchists will not be referred under this rule to the Judiciary Committee, will they?

Mr. PAYNE. I think they will be referred to the Judiciary

Mr. PAYNE. I think they will be referred to the Judiciary Committee

Mr. SHATTUC. If that is the case, then I shall object, so far as my objection will prevail.

Mr. PAYNE. As far as it relates to it—to immigration—it goes to the Committee on Immigration; but the punishment and prevention of crime would go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHATTUC. It would be a question which committee could get the most out of the Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. If the deportation of anarchists is treated as part of the punishment, that would go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Otherwise it would go to the Committee on Immigration. That would be a matter for the Speaker to decide, and gration. That would be a matter for the Speaker to decide, and ultimately the House.

Mr. SHATTUC. Could we not have a decision of it now, so as to have a peaceful time hereafter?

Mr. PAYNE. I have drawn the resolution in accordance with the language of the rule, and I did not want to abrogate, change, or amend the rule.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. GROW] such time as he may desire.
Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, the President in his message to Congress says:

The time has come when there should be additional legislation for the Philippines.

We hope to do for them what has never before been done for any people of the Tropics to make them fit for self-government after the fashion of the really free nations.

This declaration of the President represents the universal sentiment of the American people. Whatever power destroys organized government over a people is morally bound in the forum of nations to see to it that a government equally if not more efficient for the protection of life and property, is established to take the place of the government overthrown.

In the fortunes of way the United States of America Justice 1.

In the fortunes of war, the United States of America destroyed the government of Spain over the group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, bordering the Chinese Sea, known as the Philippine Archipelago, containing an area of about 120,000 square miles, with 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 inhabitants of all degrees of civilization.

In the treaty of peace concluded between Spain and the United States, it was stipulated that "the civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of these islands should be determined by the Congress of the United States." Until the armed insurrection in these islands against the sovereignty of the United States was suppressed there was nothing Congress could do except to protect and maintain that sovereignty by military power. That having been substantially accomplished, the question now presented for the action of Congress is, What ought to be done? To determine that the first thing to settle is what can be done, what legislative power has Congress over the Territories, and what is the duty of the Republic to liberty and humanity.

In our complex system of government there are three distinct kinds: The National, the State, and the Territorial; each absolute and supreme within its prescribed powers. The jurisdiction of Congress representing the legislative powers of the Government, consisting of a majority of each House of Congress with the approval of the President, or of two-thirds of each House without such approval, extends over all three of these forms of government. Within the limits of the States this jurisdiction is retricted and controlled by the receipts of government. stricted and controlled by the specific grants of power enumerated in the Constitution. Outside the limits of the States, over territory belonging to the United States, the unrestricted grant of power to Congress in the Constitution to make all needful rules and regulations respecting such territory, is restrained only by the specific prohibitions in the Constitution and, in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, "by the fundamental principle of civil and religious liberty, which restrains all the agencies of government, State and National." There is no department of the Government that can rightfully sit in judgment upon the wisdom of the exercise by Congress of this discretion in legislating for the Territories, any more than it can sit in judgment upon the wisdom of a declaration of war by Congress and the measures necessary to be adopted to bring it to a speedy and successful close.

A specific, clearly defined grant of power to Congress in the Constitution carries with it the exercise of all legislative powers necessary to make the power, specifically granted, efficient. Congress alone determines what is necessary in such cases. Any attempt by a court to do it would be judicial legislation, which is strictly forbidden in the Constitution.

Article I, section 1, of the Constitution declares that "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.'

Article I, section 8: "The Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

Article IV, section 3: The Congress shall have power "to make all needful rules and regulations" respecting the territory belonging to the United States. "New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union"

ing to the United States. Congress into this Union."

Here are two specific, clearly defined grants of power to Con-ress. One to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory belonging to the United States; the other to admit new States. Each of these grants of power carries with it the new States. power to make all laws necessary for carrying these grants into full and complete execution. Under these two unrestricted grants of power, how can there possibly be anything respecting the government of the inhabitants of territory belonging to the United States, over which Congress, in its sound discretion, has not full, unrestricted, discretionary power of legislation. And there is no tribunal that can rightfully pass upon the wisdom of the exercise by Congress of this discretion.

Justice Matthews, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S. Reports, pp. 44 and 45), said:

The personal and civil rights of the inhabitants of Territories are secured to them as to other citizens by the principles of constitutional liberty, which restrains all the agencies of government, State and national. Their political rights are franchises which they hold as privileges in the legislative discretion of the Congress of the United States.

Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Downes vs. Collector Bidwell, said:

The practical interpretation put by Congress upon the Constitution has been long continued and uniform to the effect that the Constitution is applicable to territories acquired by purchase or conquest only when and so far as Congress shall direct.

This decision is, in accordance with the legislation of Congress, uniform and unbroken for more than a hundred years.

Territory acquired either by conquest or by purchase or both ceases to be foreign territory and becomes territory belonging to the United States on the ratification of a treaty of peace or of the treaty for its purchase. But it can not judicially become a part of the United States without legislation by Congress. Territory be-longing to the United States can not at the same time be a part of the United States can not at the same time be a part of the United States. That is a judicial impossibility. Like the axiom in natural philosophy, two bodies can not at the same time occupy the same space. No territory or part of any territory be-longing to the United States can become a State or part of a State without an act of Congress.

The United States, which forms the American Republic in a geographic sense, is all the territory subject to the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, and, in the language of the school geographies, is divided into States and Territories. But in a judicial, constitutional sense the United States of America is the original thirteen States that made the Constitution and all the States admitted into the Union by act of Congress. The Constitution extended first over nine States; now it extends over fortyfive; and in the future it will extend over all other States that Congress in its sound discretion shall admit into this Union.

In the very structure of the government of the Union, from its geographic surroundings, it was just as necessary that there should have been Territorial Governments as it was to have State As no State law could have any force outside the State, it was indispensably necessary that some method should have been provided for governments for the inhabitants of territory belonging to the United States. A few pioneer settlers scattered over a given area, too few in number to maintain a government by themselves, created the first necessity for the Government of the Union to establish and maintain Territorial governments, for periods long or short, in the discretion of Congress. The history of our first century of national existence has proven conclusively the wisdom of our fathers in providing Territorial governments so well adapted for the growth and development of the Republic.

In forming the more perfect Union to take the place of the old one, under articles of confederation and perpetual union, Congress at its first session reenacted the ordinance of 1787, which applied at the time of its enactment to all territory then belonging to the United States. The ordinance of 1787, when it was reenacted, could not have been extended over the territory ceded by Georgia and North Carolina, for each of these cessions contained a condition that Congress should not prohibit slavery therein. The ordinance of 1787 contained Jefferson's original proviso prohibiting slavery in all territory, first offered by him in 1784. And it was incorporated into the ordinance of 1787, on motion of Nathan Dane, of Massachusetts, to apply to all territory northwest of the river Ohio. This ordinance applied to all territory then belonging to the United States, except the cessions from Georgia and North Carolina.

For all future acquisitions of territory Congress was authorized by the Constitution to make all needful rules and regulations. In this way provision was made for all contingencies that might possibly arise in any future acquisition of territory. Congress is thus empowered, in its Territorial legislation, to adapt it to climatic conditions, to the ever-varying social surroundings of the inhabitants of the Territories, and to determine whether an alien people, differing in language, in intelligence, and in social and moral conditions, should at any time be incorporated into the Union and become a part of its governing power.

The general power in the Government to acquire territory, and the specific grant of power to Congress for its government, carries with it, as before stated, the power to make all laws necessary to make the specific grant of power efficient.

The laws of Congress applicable only to the States must be uniform throughout the United States, and are limited and controlled by the specific grants of power in the Constitution. The laws of Congress applicable only to territory belonging to the United States can be such as in the sound discretion of Congress would be for the interest of the inhabitants thereof and that would best promote the general welfare—the great primary, paramount object in the establishment and maintenance of all free governments. The first form of government established by the Pilgrims was their written compact before landing from the Mayflower, "To form just and equal laws for the general good."

For more than a hundred years Congress has been forming Territorial governments for the inhabitants of territory belonging to the United States, with governors and judges of the courts appointed by the President and removable at his will. Call them what you please—Territories, colonies, possessions, or dependencies, makes no difference. Names are not things. An American government over the inhabitants of territory belonging to the United States is the same in its influence everywhere, no matter by what name it may be called.

The colonies of Spain and of Great Britain in the world's history illustrate in their respective growth and development the great contrast in the influences of a despotic or a free home government over the destinies of their respective colonies.

Our Territorial governments, formed in the first instance from the necessity of our geographic surroundings, have in the practical experience of our first century of national existence proven con-clusively that they are remarkably well adapted to national growth, progress, and development.

Under these Territorial governments native-born Americans have lived for periods varying from twenty to forty years, and they never once thought they were living under a despotism. Nor did anyone ever pretend until the advent of the self-assumed superior statesmen of to-day, calling themselves anti-imperialists, that this kind of colonial government would lead to the final overthrow of the liberties of the American people.

Our present Constitution was made by States for States, and for States only. By its own terms it provided, when ratified by nine of the original thirteen States, it should be established as the Constitution of the United States of America. It was extended over the other four only by the ratification as provided in the act of submission for each State. The Constitution thus ratified has never extended beyond the original thirteen States except by act of Congress in admitting new States. None of the inhabitants outside the limits of the original thirteen States had anything to do in the formation or ratification of the Constitution. By any theory of free elective government how can a constitution of government extend over a community of people who never had anything whatever to do in its formation or its ratification?

The Constitution of the United States is neither self-executing nor self-expanding. Webster, in his discussion with Calhoun in the Senate in 1849, said:

The Constitution is extended over the United States, and over nothing else. It can not be extended over anything except over the old States, and the new States that shall come in hereafter, when they do come in.

Benton, in the second volume of his Thirty Years in the Senate, says:

The Constitution was not made for Territories, but for States. It can not operate anywhere, not even in the States for which it was made, without act of Congress to enforce it. Every part of it is inoperative until put in action by statute of Congress.

In our triple form of government it is not necessary for any ourpose whatever that the Constitution should extend beyond the limits of the States. On all questions outside the limits of the States, over territory belonging to the United States, and in the intercourse of this nation with all other nations, the legislative department of the Government of the Union was created by the people to execute their will.

The flag, not the Constitution, represents the sovereignty of the nation. The legislative power of Congress, clothed with the the nation. The legislative power of Congress, clothed with the treaty-making and war powers of the Government—powers not necessarily derived from the Constitution, for they are inherent in every sovereign nation—follows the flag wherever it floats, at home or abroad, on land or sea, for its protection, and for the protection of every human being owing it allegiance. Our flag is in Cuba, but the Constitution is not there. Our flag floated over the embattled walls of the Chinese Empire, and the legislative power of Congress, not the Constitution, was behind it. That power follows the flag everywhere. The Constitution, without legislation by Congress, follows nothing outside the limits of the States for which it was made and the States admitted into the Union by act of Congress.

Under the general power to acquire territory and the specific power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting it, Congress, if there are no treaty conditions, can, in its own sound discretion, establish one form of government for one Territory and a different one for other Territories, adapting each to the climatic conditions and the habits of life of the inhabitants of the respective Territory, in the same way as different States adapt their legislation to climatic or other conditions of the people in their geographic surroundings. It has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that Congress holds the same relation to the inhabitants of territory belonging to the United States as a State legislature holds to the people of the respective State.

This discretion of Congress begins on the line that separates the States from territory belonging to the States. There is and has States from territory belonging to the States. There is and has been for years one form of government made by Congress for the district of Alaska and a different one for the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. There is one kind of government for the District of Columbia and a different one for the district of Alaska. In the District of Columbia the judges of the courts hold office during good behavior and are removable only by improschapart. during good behavior and are removable only by impeachment. In Alaska the judges are removable at the will of the President. The reason for this difference is that the Constitution extends over one district and does not extend over the other.

The territorial area of the District of Columbia was once part of the State of Maryland, and the Constitution then extended over it. Making it, by special provision in the Constitution, a separate district, with Congress as its legislature, did not change in other respects its relation to the Constitution.

Justice Nelson, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Bennet et al. vs. Porter (9 Howard, 242), referring to our Territorial governments, said:

They are not organized under the Constitution nor subject to its complex distribution of powers of government as the organic law, but are the creations exclusively of the legislative department and subject to its supervision and control.

The dangers to liberty from the exercise of this discretion by Congress can be no greater in the future than they have been in the past. But whatever the fancied danger may be, the Constitution confers this discretionary power upon Congress, and no tribunal can rightly sit in judgment upon the wisdom of its exercise save that of the people of the United States at the ballot box. In the formation of our system of government it was not to be supposed that the legislative department would not be as wise on the control of the control of all political questions that might arise in the future as was the generation that framed the Constitution, or as any other department of the Government could possibly be, if vested with power to sit in judgment upon the wisdom of its exercise. Hence all questions of legislation outside the limits of the States, not involving rights between individuals, were left to the sound discretion of the legislative department of the Government of the Union.

Justice Bradley, in the case of Mormon Church vs. United States,

Doubtless Congress in legislating for the Territories would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments; but these limitations would exist rather by inference and the general spirit of the Constitution, from which Congress derives all its powers, than by an express and direct application of its provisions. (U. S., 1, 44.)

Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Dooley et al. vs. United States, recently decided,

The case presented by the records is whether a duty laid by Congress upon goods arriving at Porto Rico from New York is a duty on an export from New York or upon an importation into Porto Rico.

In deciding the case, he says:

Congress has power under the Constitution to prescribe the manner of collecting the revenues of the country's insular possessions and has the right to lay a duty on goods imported into our insular possessions from the United States or exported from them into the United States.

It has never been claimed that there is any specific grant of power in the Constitution for the acquisition of foreign territory. Yet more than four times the area of the original thirteen States has been acquired, beginning with the purchase of Louisiana by Jefferson and ending with the treaty of peace with Spain. Under the treaty-making and war powers, inherent in all governments, these acquisitions have been made. The power to acquire carries with it the power to govern. Outside the limits of the States Congress, in its own sound discretion, in making needful rules and regulations determines what will best promote the greatness and glory of the Republic.

Congress therefore has the constitutional power to establish such a Territorial government for the Philippine Islands as in its wisdom may be thought best adapted for promoting the general welfare of their inhabitants until the time shall come for Congress to determine what form of independent government would be best adapted to their then existing condition, for I take it for granted that the American people would never consent to the admission of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into this Union, to become part of its governing power. While under the Government of the United States they would be under a free government, with their personal and civil rights secured to them the same as they are secured to the inhabitants of any other territory belonging to the United States.

All people everywhere are entitled by natural right to free elective government. But all people at a given period are not fitted for self-government. There never has been a government where the consent of all the governed was required or was necessary for just administration. Ignorance, stupidity, and criminality are not the sources of political wisdom or of wise statesman-"Governments derive their just powers from the consent ship. "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" was a declaration in opposition to the dogma of the divine right of kingly rule. Practically it has never been applied to all the inhabitants of any government, and it never will be until millennium dawn. In the practical administration of just and successful government its powers are derived from the consent of the governed if the governed are fitted for self-government. This is the idea that controls in fixing the suffrage is all five cleating governments and always will be in all free elective governments and always will be.

The century and a half of practical experience by the American colonies in township, county, and State administration before they formed their first union made possible the great American Republic of to-day. The New England township of the colonies, in which taxes were annually imposed by direct vote of the people in mass meeting assembled for schools, public highways, the support of the poor, and for the election of probate judges for the settlement of the estates of decedents, and the election of a certification of the settlement of the settle tain number of "selectmen," whose duty it was to attend to all the public affairs of the township, was the primary school which fitted the citizen for the larger duties of the government of States and the nation. With two centuries and a half of practical experience in self-government, without any serious failures, it is a bold assumption to assume now that the American people, after make the convenience or inversely the convenience of the recognition of the convenience such a long experience, are incapable of governing others or of teaching them to govern themselves.

WHAT IS THE DUTY OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC TO LIBERTY AND HUMANITY.

With the end of the Spanish-American war one volume in the world's history was closed and a new one opened. On the hemi-sphere bequeathed by Columbus and Queen Isabella to civilized man the last throne has crumbled and the last scepter is forever broken. In the course of events the responsibility has fallen upon the Congress of the United States for the government of eight or ten millions of people, former subjects of a cruel despotism, from which in the fortunes of war they were relieved by this nation. But for the Army and Navy of the United States this despotic rule of three hundred years would still be over these eight or ten millions of people, to be continued for a long, these eight of ten millions of people, to be continued for a long, indefinite period, if not forever.

This responsibility, unsought, unexpected, and undesired, has been cast upon the American people in the providence of that overruling power which controls in the affairs of men and in the destiny of nations. Any attempt to shirk this responsibility to liberty and humanity thus cast upon the American people would ill become American character or American institutions. Nations, like individuals, owe something to liberty and to the rights of a common humanity, for they are the trustees of civili-

The American Republic has in the fortunes of war a destiny to perform in Asia, greater than was its mission to Japan half a century ago, Of all the nations, it is the one best fitted to extend free representative institutions to the inhabitants of eastern Asia. As a world power this nation seeks no extended dominion. mission, its manifest destiny, is to promote the peace of the world, and so far as possible, by precept, example, and influence, to aid in securing civil and religious liberty for all mankind.

There was a time when the world's advancing civilization gathered around the Mediterranean Sea. The world's historic events were then along the Nile, the Ægean, and the Tiber. Egypt, were then along the Nile, the Ægean, and the Tiber. Egypt, Greece, Rome, and Carthage were the great actors. At that time the English language was nowhere heard, save among the few Anglo-Celts scattered over the British Isles. To-day it is spoken by 140,000,000 people, more than half of whom dwell in the United States of America, representing in their birthplaces all the nationalities of the earth, and to whose children the Anglo-American language will be their mother tongue.

In the long struggle between the Indo-Germanic and the Semetic

In the long struggle between the Indo-Germanic and the Semetic races of mankind for the dominion of the world, vast armies of Asiatic hordes, at intervals long or short, invaded eastern Europe.
The little Republic of Greece, from its geographic position, was for a long time the vanguard of European civilization. Five hundred years before the Christian era 11,000 Grecian soldiers at Marathon turned back Darius's army, gathered from all parts of the great Empire founded by Cyrus, and which then extended from the Ganges to the eastern shores of the Mediterranean. This victory saved Europe from Asiatic civilization and Asiatic barbarism, with its enslavement of man and cruel degradation and vassalage of woman. Had Darius's army triumphed at Marathon, there was then no power west of Greece that could have offered any effectual opposition to its triumphant march over eastern Europe.

At a later period Attila, with his vast army of Huns invading western Europe, was defeated at Chalons, in southeastern France, thus saving infant Christianity from disaster and European civilization from probable overthrow. At a still later period the Saracens, having overrun Syria, Persia, Arabia, Egypt, and Spain, were in their intended conquest of Europe defeated at Tours by Charles Martel. This victory, in the language of an eminent his-torian, "gave a decided check to the career of Arab conquest in western Europe, rescued Christendom from Islam, preserved the relics of ancient and the germs of modern civilization, and reestablished the old supremacy of the Indo-European over the Semetic family of mankind.

Though the Sermon on the Mount, the beginning of Christian civilization, and the teachings of the Saviour of mankind, on the seashore and along the hillsides of Judea, were in the western confines of Asia, yet they had little influence upon Asiatic civilization. Though Alexander carried Grecian arms in triumph to the walls of Babylon, "the oldest seat of earthly empire," yet Grecian arts and Grecian civilization made no lasting impress upon the civilization of the Persian Empire.

civilization of the Persian Empire.

Infant Christianity, born in the western confines of Asia, spreading westward over the European provinces of the Roman Empire and through the German forests of our Saxon ancestry to the British Isle, was transported thence, by reason of the edicts of a bigoted church and the acts of a tyrannic State, to Columbus's New World for its harvest home.

For two thousand years civilization has been moving westward from the western confines of Asia, and to-day the American Republic holds the torch of the world's advancing civilization, having carried it westward across the Pacific Ocean and planted it on the eastern confines of Asia, where its illuminating rays light up with the brightness of a morning sun the Chinese sky, which canopies one-third the population of the globe. In the over-hanging future no prophet can now foretell what will be its noonhanging rature no prophet can now foreten what will be its hoosday splendors if the American people, true to their manifest destiny, marked out by the mighty events of four hundred years, shall faithfuly discharge their responsibilities to liberty and the rights of a common humanity in the onward progress of the race to a higher and better civilization. FUNERAL OF THE LATE SENATOR KYLE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the President of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator from South Dakota, James H. Kyle, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

FOREIGN PENSION SYSTEMS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, something over a year ago, in response to a resolution which I offered in the Senate, the Secretary of State, through our ministers and consuls abroad, secured the pension laws of the leading countries of the world and sent them to the Senate. It was a large mass of manuscript, much of it in foreign tongues, and after being referred to the Committee on Pensions I saw no way of making a proper disposition of it except to place it on file in the Bureau of Pensions.

Recently Hon. James L. Davenport, First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, took up the matter and made a compilation of those laws, securing a translation of the foreign pension laws at the hands of a very accomplished clerk in the Bureau, Mr. Herman Gauss. The document has been very carefully typewritten, the entire work having been done without expense to the Government.

It will be a very valuable document to the Senate and to the country, Mr. President, and I move that it be printed as a document for the use of the Senate. The cost will be inside the statutory limit.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of the important and interesting character of the compilation, I offer a resolution for the printing of an additional number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read. The Secretary read the resolution, and by unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to its consideration, as follows:

Resolved, That 2,050 additional copies of The Foreign Pension Systems, as compiled in response to Senate resolution of January 29, 1899, be printed for the use of the Senate, and that 50 copies thereof be bound in cloth for the use of the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from New Hampshire an estimate of the cost of the additional copies?

Mr. GALLINGER. The estimated cost for 2,000 copies is $397.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire. The resolution was agreed to.

PROPOSED HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the concurrent resolution received from the House of Representatives relating to the proposed holiday recess be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution indicated by the Senator from

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 19, 1901, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 6, 1902.

Mr. ALLISON. I move the reference of the concurrent resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 12, 1901, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I have received a communication, addressed to me by the chairman of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission. In talking with him about the general question, I asked him to furnish me with any information he could, and in pursuance of that request he has sent me a letter with reference to the work of the Commission, stating the amount of the claims, and containing suggestions with respect to legislation which is necessary. I ask that the letter be printed as a document, so that it may be used by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the communication will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed as a document.

Mr. HALE. On Tuesday some papers came in from the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission which I supposed related to a deficiency of appropriation. The papers were referred to the Appropriations Committee. I find on examination that they do not refer to appropriations, and should therefore go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the papers were referred to the Committee on Appropriations may be reconsidered, and then that they may go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which certain papers from the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TABLE MONEY FOR NAVAL SQUADRON COMMANDERS.

Mr. HALE. I have a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, relating to a clause proposed to be put in the naval appropriation bill, providing a money allowance for "table money" to commanding officers of squadrons. I ask that the communication be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that it be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the communication will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed as a document.

WHALING AND SEALING VESSELS.

Mr. LODGE. I have some papers which were sent to me last year by the Department of State, after the adjournment of Congress. They relate to the arbitration now going on in The Hague between the United States and Russia, to settle claims in regard to certain whaling and sealing vessels. I ask that the papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the letter of transmittal, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Orville T. Porter, of Albany, Oreg., be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

THOMAS KENNEDY.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Thomas Kennedy be employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms as laborer in the Senate folding room at a salary of $720 per annum, to be paid from the contingent expenses of the Senate, the said employment to take effect June 30, 1902.

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to its consideration, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed of the text of the twelve chapters of the report of Isthmian Canal Commission sent to this Congress, omitting for the present the maps and appendixes that belong to said twelve chapters, so many copies as can be printed under the $500 limit, of which one-third shall be for the use of the Senate and two-thirds shall be for the use of the House of Rep-resentatives

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say to Senators that the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission will be on their desks to-morrow morning. That will give about two copies to each Senator. Mr. Amzi Smith, of the document room, told me this morning that he already had applications from outsiders for more than a hundred copies. I do not wish to have any delay about it if I can avoid it, and therefore I have worded the resolution so as to bring it within the $500 limit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEBATE ON "HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY."

Mr. CLAPP. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read and laid over until to-morrow morning.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the published reports of the speeches made upon the subject of the ratification of the so-called "Hay-Pauncefote treaty" are not as full as they might be; and

Whereas said speeches would be more fully reported if taken by the official stenographers of the Senate: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That hereafter the discussion of said treaty be made in open session of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing, and after it has been read I desire to make a single observation concerning it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 9,000 copies of the document known as Messages and Papers of the Presidents, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the remainder, if any, to be held by the superintendent of documents, subject to the future action of Congress; and an edition of 10,000 copies shall be printed, to be held by the superintendent of documents and by him sold at the actual cost of publication.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress a resolution identical in terms with the one I have now offered was submitted to the Committee on Printing, favorably reported, and was passed by the Senate. A provision similar to the one embodied in the resolution was placed upon the sundry civil appropriation bill, but was dropped out in conference.

I do not feel like discussing the matter this morning beyond saying that there is a very large demand from libraries and individuals throughout the country for this document, and there are inas throughout the country for this document, and there are in-numerable complaints coming to me, and I doubt not to other Senators, of the manner in which this publication of the Govern-ment is being sold to the people of this country upon false pre-tenses. I trust that the Committee on Printing will promptly re-port back the resolution and that we will be accorded the privilege of supplying to some extent the demand that is made upon us for this very important publication.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

IMPRISONMENT OF CERTAIN OFFENDERS.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate whether or not national bank officers or other persons convicted of crimes against the national currency act have been sentenced to imprisonment in houses of correction or jails instead of national or State penitentiaries, and if so to state to what extent and by what authority of law such sentences have been imposed.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. I offer a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to consider the expediency of providing that a larger number of copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD be placed at the disposal of members of the two Houses.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to the resolution. I have a very large number of applications for the Congressional Record from libraries and reading rooms and from publishers of newspapers and other persons to whom it seems very desirable that the Record should be furnished. It is especially desirable for the members of the two Houses of Congress that this publication should be extensively circulated and should be in every neighborhood. The accurate and literal report of what is said or done here is the defense, against misrepresentation or misruderstanding of the reputation of every man who tion or misunderstanding, of the reputation of every man who serves here.

Now, in the county where I dwell every town has a free public thorary, and there are 54 towns in the county. I believe every town but 3 or 4 of the 334 or 335 towns and cities in the Commonwealth has a free public library. There ought to be enough copies of the RECORD at the disposal of our delegation—and what I say is true, of course, of all other States—to have a copy placed in every one of those libraries.

It is the fashion to speak somewhat disrespectfully of the reports of the debates in Congress, but I do not believe there is any periodical publication on the face of the earth where so much valuable material for political history and for political science can be found. The speeches, very many of which are forgotten, represent the best work of the best minds of their various generations on subjects which are vital to the interests and the prosperity of the country. I hope my honorable friend the Senator from New York [Mr. Platt], chairman of the Committee on Printing, will advocate a liberal policy in regard to the matter of the publication of the Congressional Record.

Mr. HALE. Does the resolution provide for anything more than an inquiry?

Mr. HOAR. It provides for nothing but an inquiry into the expediency of an increased number of copies of the Congressional Record.

Mr. HALE. I do not fully agree with the Senator from Massachusetts about the hunger and thirst of the people to read the Congressional Record. I think it would be better for them if they did read it more, and thereby learn what is actually said and done here.

Mr. HOAR. I said nothing about hunger and thirst.

Mr. HOAR. I said nothing about lunger and times.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps my metaphors are rather strong. I do not object to some increase, and I hope the Senator from New York will take into consideration the proposed increase. My list is not large enough to cover the applicants, but the list of applicants is not very large.

There is one thing that is significant as showing no great general desire to read the Record. The great newspapers of the country, as I presume the Senator noticed, give practically no reports of what is said in Congress. The papers in the great cities of the Senator's own State, in New York, in Pennsylvania, in Illinois, on the Pacific coast, and elsewhere, practically give no report of the discussions in Congress. The presumption is that they do not give it because their readers do not want it.

I have noticed and so has everyone also who has seen the Eng.

I have noticed, and so has everyone else who has seen the English newspapers, that it is entirely different in England. The great newspapers of London and even the provincial newspapers report at great length not only the proceedings, but the discusreport at great length not only the proceedings, but the discussions in Parliament, largely, of course, in the House of Commons. I have seen in Birmingham and Liverpool papers two or three pages reporting fully the debates and speeches made by members of the House of Commons on public questions, and the London papers almost all pursue that practice. In that way, with the public press as a vehicle, whatever of intelligence there is to be derived from such speechmaking is conveyed to the people. But a great addition to the present free distribution of the Congression. signal Record would not reach a great many people, and it would not accomplish what ought to be accomplished—greater interest taken in and a greater knowledge of what is said here.

I hope the Senator from New York and his committee will consider the resolution and the advisability of increasing the number somewhat, though I do not think it ought to be large enough to cover every library and every institution in the land.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. MASON. I wish to make a report from the Committee on Manufactures, and I desire about five minutes to explain to the Manufactures, and I desire about two minutes to explain to the Senate the object and purpose of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Illinois making his report at this time? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, at the last session the Senate passed a resolution authorizing the Committee on Manufactures to prepare a digest of the pure food and drug laws of the different countries of the world and the different States of the United States. That digest is prepared, and I now present it as the report. States. That digest is prepared, and I now present it as the report of the committee. As I make the report, I desire to reply somewhat to matters of rather a personal character in regard to this pure-food investigation.

I want to say to the President of the Senate and to Senators that since the Committee on Manufactures undertook the investigation of this subject, about three years ago, they have taken a large volume of evidence and have reported several bills, one of which only has been passed. This investigation has awakened such an interest in the matter of pure food within this country that now every State of the United States has passed some law in regard to the regulation of food manufactures.

We found at the beginning of the investigation the most com-We found at the beginning of the investigation the most common and widespread system of adulteration of the foods the American people are using. As to flour alone, which was and is regarded as the staff of life, the committee discovered that 60 per cent of the flour that was sold in the United States was adulterated. The adulteration consisted, first, in ground white corn; second, in what is known as corn flour, which is a by-product of the glucose factory after the sugar and the gluten have been taken from the corn leaving nothing but the bask. As high as 25 or 30 from the corn, leaving nothing but the husk. As high as 25 or 30 per cent of this was used in mixing with the flours of the United States, and more than half of all the mills in the United States had what is commonly known as a mixer. The most dangerous and deleterious substance which was mixed with American flour was an article sold as mineraline, and which we traced to two or three large factories in North Carolina—I think two. I wish to say, by the way, however, that the Senator from that State was very helpful in the passage of this pure-food legislation. Those mills were engaged in the grinding of white earth, which was sold as mineraline and mixed with American flour.

The Senate amended the bill known as the Dingley bill at the request of the Committee on Manufactures and regulated that food product by placing a tax, according to my recollection, of about 4 cents a barrel upon it, so as to give notice to the consumer that it was a significant to the consumer that it is a significant to the consumer that it that it was mixed flour, treating it exactly as we treated the sub-ject of oleomargarine. The result has been that while it has not produced great revenue, perhaps not more than enough revenue to pay for its collection, yet it is that class of legislation which has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States as proper and correct. During the first twelve months after the passage of the law about 12,000 barrels of mixed flour were confiscated containing terra alba. The mills that were used in grinding it have been closed, they are absolutely extra of business and the have been closed—they are absolutely out of business—and the export trade has increased from 10,000,000 barrels of flour to

I call this to the attention of those Senators who were kind enough to help in the passage of the pure-food bill. I want to leave this thought with you all: We are looking for broader and greater markets; what we have to sell are food products—our meats and the flour made from our corn, wheat, and rye. I have discovered that the best means of obtaining for the American food products the European market is to have the Government stand back of and guarantee the purity of the goods we ship abroad.

I have here a printed letter from the leading merchants in flour in twelve or fifteen of the largest cities in the world, embracing London, Bremen, Glasgow, Liverpool, Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Antwerp, Bristol, Hamburg, and so on, stating that immediately after the passage of what is known as the American pure-food bill the demand for American flour increased. While I do not claim that that large increase of 50 per cent is due to the fact that we While I do not claim guaranteed the purity of our flour, yet I do believe, and it is generally believed by the manufacturers of flour in this country, that a large share of that increase was due to that cause. Indeed, such evidence appeared before the committee; and if somebody would have been kind enough or thoughtful enough or cared enough about it to read the correspondence of the importers and exporters of American flour, he would find that in all the great food-consuming centers of the world immediately after we passed the law guaranteeing the purity of American flour the demand for American flour increased

We had this triple advantage: We protected the consumer, we helped the honest miller, who was grinding honest flour, against the common cheat who was deceiving the people, and at the same time we advertised our food products abroad. While we have protected our own consumer we have assisted the honest manufacturer.

Not only as to flour, but as to every other food product we examined, we found this element of adulteration. We found it in the spices that go on the table, the sirups, the jellies, the jams, the pickles, and ten thousand kinds of food, many of them adulterated more by sophistication than by the introduction of actual deleterious substances. I simply suggest to you that I have presented and referred again to the same committee other bills upon that subject. While I have the floor, I desire to answer some personal criticisms which, I am informed, have been made in a newspaper—I have forgotten the name—published in the village of New York, charging that the chairman of the committee has been used as an advertising medium. No doubt I have. Every man who speaks the truth here publicly advertises the truth and injures only those shysters and shoddy men who seek to force dishonest articles on the public.

Among other things the committee examined was the question of the adulteration of American champagne. We examined every food product—flour, sirup, spices, all kinds of food, and drink of all kinds—and through the kindness of the Secretary of Agriculture these articles were submitted for analysis to the chemist in the Agricultural Department. The analysis there was published, and it naturally helped those who were producing an honest article, and naturally injured those who were doing a shoddy trick and forcing upon the American people a dishonest article.

I am replying now to a personal attack made, as I am told, in some New York newspaper, which I have heard at one time had many readers; but I have not read the article. It has, however, been quoted to me at some length. In the course of my remarks I called attention to the sworn statements of witnesses in regard to American champagne. We found that American champagne fermented in the bottle took about four years to make, and that there were a large number of honest manufacturers of American champagne, but we also found that there were a large number of snide manufacturers of champagne. As I have said, honest cham-pagne wine if left in the bottles to be fermented takes four years; but the dishonest manufacturers or men who masquerade as honest manufacturers of champagne take the new wine, charge it with carbonic-acid gas, as they do soda water, put it in bottles, and sell it as champagne. The people interested in that class of business are those who are making attacks upon the Committee on Manufactures.

In the course of my remarks I had occasion to say that a large number of the manufacturers of the United States, whose names I have forgotten, manufactured this legitimate champagne by the long process of fermentation in the bottle, and in that speech I quoted and gave the Government analysis. The people who were interested, I am told, in the association known as the American grape growers or wine growers of this country took that speech and printed it, just as a political party prints a political speech, and circulated it. I am informed that they went to the Public Printer, paid him for the printing, paid for the envelopes, paid for addressing them, and mailed the speech as a public docu-So far as I am concerned, I have no apology to make for I have great confidence and respect for any gentleman or any class of gentlemen who would circulate my speech [laughter] particularly when I am able to substantiate my statements by the certificate of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the composition of these different food products.

But, Mr. President, I have taken up more time than I intended.

I simply wanted to urge again and again upon the Senate the necessity for this national pure-food legislation. As I said before, since we started this agitation every State has taken it up and passed some good laws in regard to it. But you understand, Mr. President, that legislation to be useful must be uniform, and that there can be no uniform legislation unless it be passed by the National Legislature.

I beg to submit the report, under the resolution, which gives a digest of the pure food and drug laws of the different States of the United States and of the different countries of the world, together with court decisions affecting the same, and ask to have the PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the report will be printed and lie upon the table.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 13, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved. MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate concurrent resolution 1.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate an additional estimate of the cost of deepening the harbor of New London, Conn., including that part of Winthrops Cove embraced in New London Harbor, to 30 feet, on the lines of the survey already made by Maj. Smith S. Leach, Corps of Engineers, as described in his report to the Secretary of War, dated January 27, 1900.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 19, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 6, 1902.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. Pru-DEN. one of his secretaries.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which has passed the Senate (S. 632, I believe) to continue the Industrial Commission until February 15, 1902, and consider the same in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill S. 632, which the Clerk will report to the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to continue the Industrial Commission until February 15, 1902.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Industrial Commission authorized by "An act authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," approved June 18, 1898, and amended by "An act making appropriation for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899, is hereby continued until February 15, 1902, with all the powers and duties imposed upon it by said acts; and for salaries of commissioners, secretary, disbursing officer, stenographers, messengers, rent, miscellaneous expenses, and printing the sum of $9,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to object. I have made some investigation into this question. As I understand it, the Commission are of opinion that they can complete the entire work within the next sixty days.

Mr. CANNON. And make final report.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, I would be glad to hear from the gentleman, in order that it may be of record, if there is any fuller reason for the continuation of the Commission, and why they have not concluded their labors within the time fixed by law.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. CANNON. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I have a letter here from the chairman of the Commission covering two pages of the size that I show to the House that goes into the question fully. But I think perhaps I can save the time that would be required by reading it, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I will say to the gentleman that about three years ago, as he is aware, this Commission, with a very large jurisdiction, was created by legislation. They have done an immense amount was created by legislation. They have done an immense amount of work, covering over 18 volumes, having examined six or seven hundred witnesses and experts. Most of these volumes have been published; but from their very size, and the number of questions that they treat, it now seems desirable to the Commission that they should have this additional sixty days to make their final report, to continue the abridgment which would be useful to the House, to the Senate, and the country. From the best information that I have been able to get from this letter, as well as from some slight knowledge of the work they have been doing, it seems to me, the expenditure having been made that I speak of, and the fact the work has been performed, that it is necessary to have the lifetime of the Commission extended for the sixty days in order that the public may properly utilize the results of their inquiry and labor.

The letter is as follows:

Offices United States Industrial Commission,

Washington, D. C., December 2, 1901.

Sir. The Industrial Commission herewith presents a brief statement of the condition of its work and of the reasons which make necessary an extension of its term of service from December 15, 1901, to February 15, 1902.

The Commission was created by an act of Congress of June, 18, 1898. Its original term was two years, but the Fifty-sixth Congress, recognizing the exceedingly wide scope of the Commission's investigations, provided for its extension until December 15, 1901. The Commission consists at present of 4 Senators, 4 Representatives, and 10 salaried members, 9 appointed by the President and 1 who retained his position after the close of his term of office as a member of Congress. The salaries of the commissioners are $3,600 each, while the Commission has been given an annual appropriation of $75,000 for expenses; the whole of this sum, however, not having been expended in any year.

member of Congress. The salaries of the commissioners are $3,600 each, while the Commission has been given an annual appropriation of $75,000 for expenses; the whole of this sum, however, not having been expended in any year.

The act creating the Industrial Commission gave it far-reaching and important duties. It was directed to "investigate questions pertaining to immigration, to labor, to agriculture, to manufacturing, to business, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation as it may deem best upon these subjects." No other Commission appointed by this or any other Government has ever been given authority to make such comprehensive investigation of industrial conditions. The Commission believes that it has, with marked success, carried out the instructions of the law, and that its reports will prove the most valuable storehouse of information for the legislator, the student, and the citizen that has ever been prepared in any country. The Commission has endeavored, in an impartial way, to secure the fullest and most correct information regarding all industrial conditions and problems and to secure, likewise, the free expression of opinion of the citizens regarding these conditions and problems.

The wide scope of the Commission's work may be judged from the fact that its investigations, aside from its final report of conclusions and recommendations, include no less than 18 octavo volumes, containing nearly 16,000 pages of closely set type. They include 4 volumes relating to trusts and industrial combinations (one of these covering existing legislation regarding trusts and another industrial combinations in Europe); 2 volumes on transportation; 2 on manufactures and general business; 2 on agriculture and agricultural labor, besides a valuable report on the distribution of farm products constituting another volume; 1 volume on mining and mine labor; 1 on immigration (including a part on the subject of education), and 5 on different branches of the labor problem.

the time limited by law, and is able to report that all of the volumes, except that containing its conclusions and recommendations, will be ready to submit to Congress before December 15. It has been found impossible, however, to complete the final volume. It is the aim to present in this volume, in thorough but concise form, the essential facts elicited in all of the Commission's investigations. The volume must necessarily be of considerable size and must cover many topics, as may be seen by the preliminary outline. The final report will probably contain from 700 to 1,000 pages. On the basis of the facts thus epitomized the Commission will draw up its conclusions and suggestions for legislation.

Obviously, the preparation of such a report requires great care and thorough discussion. The relatively large membership of the Commission makes it the more difficult to reach a general concensus as to conclusions and desirable legislation, while at the same time rendering more valuable the result ultimately reached. The Commission would doubtless find itself fairly able to complete the review of facts by December 15, but to agree upon the conclusions and recommendations within that time is practically out of the question.

The Commission has already virtually completed its review of facts and statements of conclusions regarding the subjects of transportation, truits, agriculture, immigration, and mining, and has made considerable progress in the direction of proposed recommendations on these topics. The difficulty of the problems involved, however, calls for careful and prolonged deliberation. The Commission has been unable as yet to do more than prepare a preliminary draft for the final report regarding the important topics of manufactures and general business, labor problems, and taxation. To complete the report on these topics and to draw up recommendations for needed legislation regarding them will require not less than two months' additional time. The various parts of the final report can, if desired, be submitt

The SPEAKER. Does gentleman from Indiana? Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the

Mr. CANNON. I yield first to the gentleman from Georgia, my colleague on the committee, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, in addition to what has been stated by the gentleman Tennessee, in addition to what has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as a reason for this extension of time, that of the ten Congressmen appointed on this Commission only two or three of them have served. The others know nothing at all of what has been done and are in no shape to sign the final report. They must examine the summary of testimony; they must get some information at least to predicate a report upon before they can sign it.

Now, this is more an accommodation to them than anybody else. It is true that the final report can not be prepared within the date of the limitation of this Commission, and you would lose that; and if the report were ready to-day to be signed, there are not over one or two members of Congress appointed on that Commission prepared to sign it. They know nothing about it, and it will require thirty days at least or more for those gentlemen to become familiar with the report before it can be signed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Illinois

allow me to address my question to the gentleman from Georgia? I think it would take but a minute to answer

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It was stated in newspaper reports, apparently reliable, last summer, that the Commission had experienced difficulty in having witnesses who were connected with the trusts of the country to testify. Is that one of the pur-with the trusts of the country to testify. Is that one of the purposes of continuing this Commission?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No! No!

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There is a fact about that that I would like to ask the gentleman, if he will kindly yield to me.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not hear distinctly the gentleman's question. Will he kindly repeat it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indianal Leave that it was reported in the

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I say that it was reported in the press during the summer that that Commission was having difficulty in securing the evidence of people reputed to be in connecwith trusts

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me say to the gentleman, and to the House, that the entire testimony referring to the question of trusts is all in, and the summary of that testimony has been published, and the summary of about all of the testimony has been published; but the members of Congress attached to the Commission have not had time or not taken time to investigate the matter and know nothing at all about it yet.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to ask this question: If the members of Congress appointed as members of this Commission have not attended the sittings of the Commission, how is it possible for them now to make a report to this Congress on what somebody else has done?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They will have to look into the matter or they can not join in the report. But let me add, in answer to my colleague [Mr. Maddox], that these members of the Commission, having a summary of all the testimony on all the questions investigated by the Commission, can now in a very short time nvestigated by the Commission, can now in a very short time examine that summary of testimony and determine for themselves what kind of a report they want to sign.

Mr. MADDOX. My colleague does not understand me. My inquiry was this: If these members of Congress have failed to attend to the duties which were imposed upon them by this House, how can they now undertake to sign this report? It would appear that they have failed to discharge their duty. In other words, they have not during the secret of the Commission given it the they have not during the sessions of the Commission given it the benefit of their presence, which ought to have been had in the investigation of these questions.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman did not hear all that I said. The final report can not be made by Saturday, the time limited by existing law for the duration of the Commission. If the Commission should expire at that time we shall lose the benefit of their labors. Members of the Commission who have not yet examined the evidence could not within that time be in shape to sign the report one way or another.

Mr. MADDOX. My colleague should not understand me as opposing this proposition at all. I simply wanted to know why these gentlemen had not attended to their duty.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I can not answer. That is a personal question for each one of them. I want to suggest, however, that you gave these members of Congress no compensation for the time and trouble they were expected to bestow upon these mat-

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMISSION TO CHINA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the pay of the clerks to committees of the House of Representatives which have been or may be hereafter authorized by the House, who are paid during the session only, shall begin from the time such clerks entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairmen of the several committees employing clerks for the session only.

Mr. JOY. I should like to have the report read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOY. I should like to have the report read, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, having considered the question of the designation of clerks to committees provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution.

The act referred to provides for 17 clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session. Your committee in the resolution herewith reported designate 16 committees to which clerks shall be assigned, leaving 1 clerkship to be designated to a committee hereafter. Your committee recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution.

Mr. JOY. Lask for the immediate considered.

Mr. JOY. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolutions

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri if these clerks who have been recommended for the various committees are assigned to the same committees that had clerks last year, with one exception, that exception being that one less clerk is assigned than last year.

Mr. JOY. These are the same assignments made last year, with the exception of two committees, the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Insular Affairs, which, since the resolution of last year, have been provided with annual clerks. This assigns only 16 of the 17 clerks provided for, the other one having been left open for further consideration by the Committee on Accounts.

tee on Accounts.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOY. I do.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does this resolution provide for stenographers for these various committees?
Mr. JOY. It does not. It is simply the assignment of clerks provided for in the legislative bill. It provides for nothing further

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When stenographers for committees are provided, who employs them and out of what fund are they paid?

Mr. JOY. They are employed by resolution going through the Committee on Accounts, if they are new ones.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The reason why I ask the question is that I know one of the committees, of which I was a member, has had trouble in getting a stenographer to take down its hearings, of which we had a great many.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to say that the stenographers to committees are furnished on application to the three official stenographers to committees?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then the rule is that when we want a stenographer to report a committee hearing we come to the official stenographers here at the desk and request it.

Mr. JOY. That is right. There are three stenographers to committees of the House, a third one having been added last year.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The application is not made to the official reporters of debates, but to the stenographers to committees—a separate set of stenographers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF DECEMBER SALARIES.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I' also ask for the consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri also reports and asks for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1901, on the 18th day of said month.

on the 18th day of said month.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 18th, on the 18th day of said month.

The SPEAKER. This is a joint resolution, which the Chair thinks will require unanimous consent to be considered. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SMOKING ON THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the Clerk to read clause 7 of Rule XIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause. Neither shall any person be allowed to smoke upon the floor of the House at any time.

The SPEAKER—The Chair has this clause model for the series of the strict the series of the ser

The SPEAKER. The Chair has this clause read for the purose of calling the attention of members to its provisions in respect to smoking. Many members have been under the impression in the past, without having carefully examined the rule, that they could smoke in this Hall when the House is not in session. That is against the rule.

The rule itself makes it the duty of the Doorkeeper to require its enforcement, and the Chair demands of the Doorkeeper to require its enforce it. The Chair trusts that every member of the House will feel it to be a pleasure to aid in the enforcement of this most needed rule. [Applause.]

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution and Senate joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 1:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate an additional estimate of the cost of deepening the harbor of New London, Conn., including that part of Winthrops Cove embraced in New London Harbor, to 30 feet on the lines of the survey already made by Maj. Smith S. Leach, Corps of Engineers, as described in his report to the Secretary of War dated January 27, 1900—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Joint resolution (S. R. 15) to encourage the holding of the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition in the city of Charleston, county of Charleston, State of South Carolina, during the years 1901 and 1902-to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 47.

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents as may be necessary in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution,

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 46.

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON, MARRIOTT BROSIUS.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, as the successor of the Hon. Marriott Brosius, late Representative of the Tenth district of Pennsylvania, it is my painful duty to announce his death, which occurred at his home in Lancaster on March 16, 1901, just a few days after his return from the last session of Congress. Mr. Brosius was a member of the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses, and was reelected to the Fifty-seventh Congress having been returned was reelected to the Fifty-seventh Congress, having been returned a number of times without opposition. It is not my intention to enter at this time upon an extended eulogy of his life. I shall ask the House at a future time to set apart a day to permit members to express their appreciation of his life, his character, and his services. I therefore offer the following resolutions, and ask for their adoption:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 48.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. MARRIOTT BROSIUS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now ad-

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and accordingly, in pursuance of the order heretofore made, the House (at 12 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) adjourned till Tuesday next.

House joint memorial No. 5, by Mounce and Triesch, asking Congress for the opening of the Snake and Columbia rivers to navigation.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialist, the governor and legislature of the State of Idaho, would respectfully represent:

Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the governor and legislature of the State of Idaho, would respectfully represent:

That a canal around The Dalles-Celilo Rapids of the Columbia River would open up the Columbia and Snake rivers to navigation and promote the settlement and development of the Pacific Northwest, and especially the Columbia River basin, known as the inland empire, comprising a territory richer in wheat than the Dakotas, already producing over 5,000,000 bushels, and, with an open river to the sea, easily capable of producing 25,000,000 bushels, thereby of itself swelling the present magnificent total of 35,000,000 bushels of the inland empire to 55,000,000; the latter comprising a territory as rich in cattle and horses as Colorado; a territory as rich in choice timber as Michigan in her palmiest days; a territory richer in gold and copper than California or Montana, only awaiting transportation; a territory rich in fruits, rich in ceal, rich in silver and lead, rich in lime, marble, and granite.

The products of the Columbia River basin above The Dalles-Celilo Rapids in 1900 approximate 80,000 carloads, which the railroads frankly admit they have not the facilities for handling. And yet the resources of this section are as yet only beginning to be developed.

The Clearwater country embraces about 6,200,000 acres, including the northeastern corner of Oregon; Asotin County, Wash; Nez Perce, Latah, and Idaho counties, and part of Shoshone County, Idaho. It is drained by the Snake and Clearwater rivers and their tributaries, and its only natural, logical, commercial outlet is by way of the Snake and Columbia rivers to the Sacaset excepting only at The Dalles-Celilo Rapids and the few insignificant bowleder obstructions.

The population of this district is fully 50,000 people, while that of the inland empire as a whole to be directly benefited by an open river is 35,000 or more, and the territory is easily capable of supporting a population of 10,000,000 souls.

The agricultural wealth of this territory is of first importance. Its grain belt is estimated to comprise 2,200,000 acres. Its capacity of production of cereals for export is conservatively estimated at 25,000,000 bushels annually. About 700,000 acres of this land were fenced, but only 375,000 acres were cultivated during the year 1900, including 25,000 acres in cultivated grasses, and all classes of hay lands. This leaves 1,500,000 acres, classed as first quality of grain lands, which are still unfenced waste. These lands are largely remote from the transportation facilities, which alone are required to promote rich annual harvests.

The yield of cereals in the Clearwater country for 1900 is estimated at 5,450,000 bushels of wheat, 1,120,000 bushels of oats and barley, and 284,000 bushels of flax, a total of 6,854,000 bushels. Of this grain nearly 6,000,000 bushels should be exported before the next harvest. This would load over 7,000 cars, and the existing means of transportation are inadequate to move even the crop of this year.

The wheat soils of the plateaus adjacent to the Columbia and Snake rivers are certainly the richest on the continent, crops of 40 to 60 bushels per acre being not uncommon, and 30 bushels being an ordinary average for large areas.

Bordering the grain belt are valleys and benches that are adapted to fruit being not uncommon, and 30 bushels being an ordinary average for large areas.

Bordering the grain belt are valleys and benches that are adapted to fruit growing and the cultivation of vegetables. This area of fruit land approximates 100,000 acres. The irrigable bottom lands approach 25,000 acres, and the benches and plateaus suited to apples, pears, cherries, prunes, plums, etc., aggregate a very large acreage.

The shipments of fruits and vegetables for the year equal 490 carloads, including Upper Snake River. The capacity for the production of tonnage from orchards and gardens is very great, the average, when in full bearing and thorough cultivation, being one carload per acre. This industry, however, is in a measure still dormant, because it is dependent upon ready market facilities more than almost any other. It must wait for the extension of rail-road and steamboat traffic routes. There are perhaps 12,000 acres in the district now cultivated to fruit trees, which are fast approaching the age from which profitable crops may be anticipated.

The live-stock industry is next to agriculture in importance, measured by the year's returns. There is a record of the shipment of 19,000 head of cattle since January, 1900, valued at $450,000. This cattle industry is increasing. The large herds have been reduced on the ranges, but the raising of cattle on farms and in inclosed pastures has increased in still greater degree. There has been an increase of exports during the year, while the accumulation of stock cattle has increased fully 25 per cent. The limit of the output will not be reached for many years. These rich soils are prolific of a variety of crops suited to economic beef production. The adjument of sheep and hogs from the Lewiston district equal about $3.00 for this year. The stocks on the Lewiston district equal about $3.00 for this year. The stocks on the table with the control of the production of the pr

House joint memorial No. 6, by Davis of Elmore, prohibiting and regulating Chinese and Japanese immigration.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the governor and the legislature of the State of Idaho, would most respectfully but urgently ask for the passage of a law extending all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming to this country of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent, and more especially the act of Congress of May 5, 1882, for a further period of ten years from the expiration of the same on May 5, 1902. And your memorialists would further ask that such laws be extended to include Japanese laborers and those of Japanese descent; and the secretary of state is hereby requested to forward a copy of this memorial to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

diers' Home at Fort Sherman, Idaho.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States;

Whereas by act of Congress and the orders of the War Department the troops have been removed from Fort Sherman to the newly established military post at Spokane, Wash; and

Whereas the present site of Fort Sherman with all its buildings and improvements is worthless to the United States and can not be sold for any great amount of money; and

Whereas it is located in a healthy part of the State, at the north end of Coeur d'Alene Lake, a most beautiful body of water, upon which are many steamers, with Coeur d'Alene city near by, with good railroad facilities; and Whereas there is not a National Soldiers' Home in the extreme Northwestern States:

Therefore we earnestly ask that you give this matter due consideration and establish a National Home upon the site of Fort Sherman, in order that those men that defended the country's flag in time of peril may have a pleasant, healthy place to spend their last remaining days on earth, and that a copy of this memorial be sent to each of our Senators and Representative in Congress and that they are urged to give their best influence toward the accomplishment of the matter herein set forth.

Mr. HEITFELD. I present a petition of the legislature of Idaho, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of President, Vice-President, and United States Senators by direct vote of the people. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Senate joint memorial No. 2. By committee on privileges and elections.

Memorial requesting Congress to call a convention for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which amendment shall provide for the election of President, Vice-President, and United States Senators by direct vote of the people.

amendment shall provide for the election of President, Vice-President, and United States Senators by direct vote of the people.

Whereas a large number of State legislatures have at various times adopted memorials and resolutions in favor of election of President, Vice-President, and United States Senators by popular vote; and Whereas the National House of Representatives has on four separate occasions within recent years adopted resolutions in favor of this proposed change in the method of electing the President, Vice-President, and United States Senators, which were not adopted by the Senate; and Whereas Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments; and believing there is a general desire upon the part of the citizens of the State of Idaho that the President, Vice-President, and United States Senators should be elected by a direct vote of the people. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the legislature of the State of Idaho favors the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution which shall provide for the election of President, Vice-President, and United States Senators by popular vote, and joins with other States of the Union in respectfully requesting that a convention be called for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution, which amendment shall provide for a change in the present method of electing President, Vice-President, and United States Senators, so that they can be chosen in each State by a direct vote of the people.

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution and application to Congress for the calling of a convention be sent to the secretary of state of each of the United States, and that a similar copy be sent to the President of the United States Senator, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and our Representatives in Congress.

Senate joint memorial No. 7-By Worthman.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that at the battle of Santa Ana, P. I., on the 5th day of February, 1899, the First Regiment of Idaho Volunteer Infantry captured two Krupp field guns from the enemy, and your memorialists, desirous of perpetuating in a fitting manner the memory of the gallantry of the Idaho regiment on that memorable day, respectfully and earnestly pray that such steps may be taken by Congress as will enable the present custodians of said Krupp guns to transfer them to the State of Idaho, to the end that they may be properly mounted at the State capital for the purposes above indicated; and as in duty bound your memorialists will ever pray.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 8th day of March, 1901.

THOS. F. TERRELL, President of the Senate.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

Your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Idaho, respectfully memorialize your honorable body, and represent:

That one of the principal interests in the State of Idaho, one in which the greatest amount of capital is invested, and upon the welfare of which the greater number and most deserving part of our people are dependent, is the production and disposition of live stock.

That any legislation, Nationalor State, which in effect discriminates against said industry, would be harmful not only to those directly interested therein by reason of investment, but to the many whose vocation is the care and management of live stock, the farmer who raises hay for their consumption, the many merchants and general storekeepers who trade almost exclusively in cattle-raising districts, and a large part of our people who are more indirectly benefited by and dependent thereon.

That the bill known as the "Grout bill" (H. B. 3717), while extremely harmful to the live-stock interests and those dependent thereon, would not, in our opinion, protect either the dairy farmer, who produces butter, or the public who consumes it, against competition with, and the consumption of, the artificial product colored to represent the original.

That while not desiring to enter into the merits of eleomargarine as a food product, we believe that the public who do not wish to use it as a food, and the dairy farmer who produces butter, are best protected against the imitation article by the provisions of section 2 of the substitute for House resolution No. 3717, known as the "Wadsworth bill," which in substance and effect provides, under penalty, that eleomargarine can only be sold in original packages, sealed by the Government revenue stamp, and distinctly marked in the substance and upon the wrapper with the word "eleomargarine."

That for these reasons we memorialize your honorable body arine."

That for these reasons we memorialize your honorable

ESTATE OF JOHN KERR, DECEASED.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for the information of the Senate

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the claim represented by the following bill, to wit, S. 5253, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, for the relief of the estate of John Kerr, deceased, together with all of the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and the said Court of Claims shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HALE. What is the resolution?

Mr. HALE. What is the resolution?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.
The Secretary again read the resolution.
Mr. CARMACK. I will explain the resolution to the Senator.
Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go to the committee.
Mr. CARMACK. I was going to state that the claim was included in a resolution reported at the last session of Congress by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], from the Committee on Claims, and it passed the Senate, but by mistake this claim was

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. All such resolutions ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri ob-

Mr. HALE. Let it be referred to the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Claims can consider it and notify the Senate of its action. The Senate committee can itself refer a claim under the Bowman Act. A number of cases have been reported heretofore, and all such cases should be acted upon in the same way.

Mr CARMACK. This claim is under the act of 1887.

Mr. CARMACK. This claim is under the act of 1887. Mr. MARTIN. I am sure if the Senator from Missouri understood the case he would not make an objection to the resolution. This claim was considered by the Committee on Claims and was approved, and it was incorporated in a resolution along with half a dozen others, which resolution was reported to the Senate and passed by the Senate. By some clerical mistake only the other bills which were incorporated in the resolution appeared in the official record.

Mr. HALE. What did the resolution itself do?

Mr. MARTIN. It referred the cases to the Court of Claims. And that is what this resolution proposes?

Mr. MARTIN. That is all this resolution proposes. All the other cases, five or six, have gone to the Court of Claims. They were ordered there by the Senate, and this claim, by a clerical mistake, was omitted.

Mr. HALE. All the others were referred?

Mr. MARTIN. All the others were referred, and this claim was omitted.

Mr. COCKRELL. If this is simply a correction of the record, I do not object to the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that all the other claims were referred?

Mr. CARMACK. All of them. The resolution was agreed to.

ALTAMAHA RIVER AND BRUNSWICK HARBOR, GEORGIA.

Mr. CLAY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause an examination and survey of Plantation and Clubb creeks, Georgia, to be made, with a view of providing an inside water route navigable for river steamers, from the Altamaha River into the port of Brunswick, and to submit a report as to the feasibility of the same, together with an estimate as to the cost.

COST OF OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CLAY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

*Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to send to the Senate for the information of the Senate, at the earliest practical time, a full and complete statement of the amounts paid to the different steamship lines for the mail service between the United States and foreign ports under an act to provide ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce, approved March 3, 1891, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, together with a copy of the contracts now in existence for the continuation of said mail service.

CUSTOMS TARIFF IN PHILIPPINES.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate at his earliest convenience complete schedules of the customs tariffs enacted by the Taft Commission, and heretofore in force in the island of Luzon, Philippine Islands.

Mr. LODGE. All that matter is in print in the report accompanying the bill reported by the committee of the other House.

Mr. MITCHELL. We have not the document here and I should like to have it

Mr. LODGE. It is in the document room.
Mr. MITCHELL. No longer ago than Saturday I inquired for it there and there was nothing on the subject. I am very anxious to have this information, and I see no reason why we should not have it.

Mr. LODGE. There is no reason why there should not be more copies furnished if the supply is exhausted. It has certainly been in the document room.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 14th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 632) to continue the Industrial Commission until February 15, 1902.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF PORTO RICO.

WILLIAM HARDEMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, relative to the claim of William Hardeman, a British subject, amounting to $465.30, for property destroyed by the United States military authorities at Siboney, Cuba, on July 12, 1898.

In view of the statement by the Secretary of State that the claim appears to be a meritorious one, I recommend that an appropriation be made to pay it.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, Washington, December 13, 1901.

Mr. HALE. Of course, generally Cuban claims arising from the war ought to go to the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission. I suppose if the message should be referred, as an appropriation is asked, to the Committee on Appropriations, that committee might send the claim to the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission; but clearly we can not take up all of these individual claims, even if in the end they are entitled to an appropriation, and consider them in the committees of Congress. The Spanish Treaty Claims Commission was created for the purpose of considering all of these questions. I will ask that the message be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as an appropriation is asked for, so

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the message be again read. It is a short

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.
The Secretary again read the message.
Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission would have jurisdiction of this claim of a British subject?

Mr. HALE. On the second reading of the message that same question occurred to me.

Mr. FORAKER. I can give the Senator information on that point. I am sure that the Commission would not have jurisdiction of this character of claims.

Mr. HALE. No; not the claim of a British subject.

Mr. LODGE. If I may be allowed a moment I will state that the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission is to deal with the claims against the Spanish Government.

Mr. FORAKER. And none other.
Mr. LODGE. And not with claims against our own Government. We assumed the claims against the Spanish Government prior to the war, as I understand it.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the practice has been that claims of this character have been referred to the Committee on Foreign

Mr. CULLOM. I was just about to state that it should go to that or some other proper committee for investigation. After that is done, if it is reported favorably, it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations, perhaps.

Mr. FORAKER. We have had quite a number of claims similar to this one since I have been serving on the committee. We investigated and made report as to the merits, and when reported favorably they were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. To which committee does the Senator refer?
Mr. FORAKER. The Committee on Foreign Relations.
Mr. HALE. As it is a claim of a British subject, I have no objection to its going to that committee for investigation.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I was endeavoring to hear. I understand that some claim was presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the claim of a British subject for losses sustained in the island of Cuba at the hands of United States troops, and it has been referred, as is usual in all such cases, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MASON. All right.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State covering statements showing receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company up to November 1, 1901, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, in pursuance of section 2 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota request the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, is it not usual to address resolutions of this character to the President and not to the Secretary of State?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the usual form be followed in this case, which is to ask the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish the information.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. Mr. LODGE. No doubt the Secretary of State has the informa-

Mr. NELSON. I will modify the resolution in the way suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the Senate, at the earliest practicable time, a copy of the report made by Ambassador Hon. Joseph H. Choate, to the State Department on October 9, 1901, relative to certain charges imposed by the London dock companies upon American flour, and other American products, shipped to that port.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. In connection with the resolution just adopted, I present papers containing information and data relative to cerreferent papers containing information and data relative to certain charges imposed by the London dock companies upon American flour, American lumber, and other American products shipped to that port, and with respect to the so-called "London clause" inserted in bills of lading. I move that the papers be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

- SURVEY OF OHIO RIVER.

Mr. MASON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the Ohio River from Mound City, Ill., to Cairo, Ill., with a view to ascertain what improvement, if any, is desirable; with a view to the protection of the banks and levees on the Illinois side, and to submit an estimate of the cost thereof.

SUPPRESSION OF ANARCHY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on the 4th instant, which will be

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate, by bill or otherwise, as to the following matters, viz:

First. Has Congress constitutional power to legislate for the punishment of anarchists who assassinate or attempt to assassinate the President of the United States within the territorial limits of any State; and if Congress has no such power, whether it is expedient to amend the Federal Constitution to enable Congress to so legislate?

Second. Whether it is necessary and expedient to so amend the Federal Constitution as to empower Congress to prevent by such means as may be deemed necessary the teachings by anarchists of the doctrine that all governments should be destroyed, and that to do this the chief rulers of such governments should be destroyed, and that to do this the chief rulers of such governments should be assassinated.

Third. Whether it is necessary and expedient to so amend the Federal Constitution that Congress shall have power to punish all persons belonging to anarchical associations or societies which have for their object the promulgation of the doctrine that all governments should be destroyed and that to effect this their chief rulers should be assassinated.

Fourth. What amendments, if any, are necessary to the naturalization laws to prevent the coming into this country of anarchists and their becoming citizens of the United States; also, whether it be necessary and expedient to so amend the Federal Constitution that anarchists teaching the doctrine that all governments should be destroyed by the assassination of their chief rulers and who are already citizens of the United States should by act of Congress, after trial and conviction, be imprisoned for life or deported from the United States.

Fifth. Whether it is necessary and expedient to so amend the Federal Constitution as to give Congress the power to establish a penal colony on some suitable island under the jurisdiction of the United States to which, af

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is nothing mandatory or coercive in the provisions of the resolution. It simply directs the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report in reference to certain legal propositions in regard to the suppression of anarchy and the punishment of anarchists in the United States. I do not propose to discuss the subject at this time, and I shall not be pre-propose to discuss the subject at time time, and I shall not be prepared to discuss it until we hear from the law committee of the Senate on the legal questions involved. The resolution merely directs the Committee on the Judiciary to make inquiry.

I frankly state for myself that I am not prepared to enter into debate on the question of anarchy until I hear from the distinguished committee, of which the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar], a lawyer of unquestioned ability, is chairman. The resolution will lead to no debate, and I ask for its present consideration. consideration.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint The PRESIDENT pro tempore land before the senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 76) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1901, on the 18th day of said month; which was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be read at length. The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as fol-

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1901, on the 18th day of said month.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEBATE ON "HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. Clapp on the 12th instant, as follows:

Whereas the published reports of the speeches made upon the subject of the ratification of the so-called "Hay-Pauncefote treaty" are not as full as they might be; and

Whereas said speeches would be more fully reported if taken by the official stenographers of the Senate: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That hereafter the discussion of said treaty be made in open session of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I move the reference of the resolution-

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—
Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.
Mr. CLAPP. What is the motion?

Mr. SPOONER. I was about to move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules, but if that motion is not agreeable to the Senator I will withhold it.

Mr. CLAPP. It is not. I wish to be heard upon the resolution. Mr. SPOONER. Very well, then; I withhold the motion. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota recognized.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire, in the first place, to answer the suggestion that this resolution was introduced in a spirit of humor. While I am willing to concede with the American public that an executive session partakes largely of the nature of a joke, I disclaim any intention of that sort in the introduction of this resolution.

While my service here has been brief, I have lived in this country a great many years, and I know that the people of this country regard the executive sessions of the Senate largely in the light of a farce; and, Mr. President, there is a reason why they should so regard them. The reason is that, except in some great crisis where Congress is warranted in sitting in secret, there is no occasion for secret sessions. The American public believe that they have the right—and they insist upon that right, and in spite of every effort of the Senate they will have it—to know what transpires in executive sessions.

I realize, Mr. President, that this resolution will undoubtedly be defeated by an overwhelming vote; but I have the satisfaction of knowing that the time will come when tradition, that finds little consideration save in antiquity, will become part and parcel of the rubbish that marks the progress of this great people of ours.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Child win the chair). The

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Cullom in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that I wish to vote in favor of the immediate consideration and adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

One of the most important matters before this Congress is to be disposed of before the close of this legislative day. We have agreed to vote—and I am very happy that that is the case—upon the so-called Hay-Pauncefote treaty. The treaty itself has been made public; everything so far connected with its negotiation has been made public; the newspapers of this country, with that spirit of enterprise which is characteristic of them, published practically all of the treaty the day after it was filed in the State Department, and it seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me that there can be no good made and the seems to me the seems to and it seems to me that there can be no good reason now why the people of the United States should not hear this important debate in its closing hours.

I have another reason, Mr. President, for supporting the resolution in addition to that suggested by the Senator from Minnesota. I have heard in this body, in executive session, some of the most learned discussions upon international law that I have ever heard in my life or expect to hear again. I remember distinctly the speech made by the predecessor of the Senator from Minne-

the speech made by the predecessor of the Senator from Minnesota, the late Senator Davis—

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will permit me, I think this discussion should be in secret session, and therefore I move that we go into secret session.

Mr. MASON. I am going to sit down just as soon as I finish a simple statement. I am not going to discuss the merits of the treaty. My statement certainly need not be made in secret session.

Mr. MONEY. I think the discussion of the propriety of holding secret sessions upon treaties should take place in secret session.

Mr. MASON. I was about to say, Mr. President, just before I sat down, that if that speech by the late Senator Davis, of Min-

Mr. MONEY. I raise the point of order, Mr. President, if it is necessary to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi raises the point of order that the Senate should go into secret session.

Mr. MASON. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not in order. The Chair thinks it is his duty, if the Senator from Illinois insists upon proceeding, to put the question on the motion that the doors of the Senate be closed.

Do I understand the Chair to rule

Mr. MASON. Do I understand the Chair to rule—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that upon the motion of a Senator the doors of the Senate must be closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion must be seconded, however, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HOAR. I second the motion, Mr. President.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts seconds the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.
Mr. MASON. The Senator, I hope, will understand that I have made all the speech I intended to make upon the ancient barnacle known as an executive session; but I did want to suggest the propriety of having reported such speeches as that of the late Senator Davis, to which I have referred. I have also heard able speeches from other Senators in this body in executive session upon questions that could not involve us in trouble with foreign nations if discussed in open session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BROSIUS.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives relative to the death of my late colleague in that body, Hon. MARRIOTT BROSIUS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 13, 1901. Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. MARRIOTT BROSIUS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now addresses.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The resolutions were read; and by unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to their consideration, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. MARRIOTT BROSIUS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 17, 1901, at 12 o'clock meridian.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

The injunction of secrecy was removed from the convention between the United States and Great Britain, to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, signed November 18, 1901; also from all proposed amendments and the votes thereon, and from the final vote on the resolution of ratification.

RATIFICATION OF THE INTEROCEANIC CANAL TREATY.

IN EXECUTIVE SESSION, December 16, 1901.

The Senate having under consideration the convention between the United States and Great Britain to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, signed November 18, 1901,

Mr. BACON proposed the following amendments: In the preamble strike out all after the words "United States," in the tenth line, down to and including the word "convention," in line 11.

Strike out from Article II, in line 10, the following words: "Subject to the provisions of the present treaty."

Strike out all of Articles III and IV.

Mr. CULBERSON proposed the following amendment:
Insert at the end of section 5, Article III, the following:

It is agreed, however, that none of the immediately foregoing conditions and stipulations in sections Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this article shall apply to measures which the United States may find it necessary to take for securing by its own forces the defense of the United States and the maintenance of public order.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi proposed the following amendment

Strike out of Article III the following:

Substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople, signed the 28th October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not doubt that at all, not in the least, from the gentleman's standpoint, but unless that is done I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (with Mr. Hepburn in the chair) for the consideration of House bill 5833, temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other pur-

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the provisions of an act entitled "An act to revise and amend the tariff laws of the Philippine Archipelago," enacted by the United States Philippine Commission on the 17th day of September, 1901, shall be and remain in full force and effect, and there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the Philippine Archipelago from the United States the rates of duty which are required by the said act to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries into said archipelago.

SEC. 2. That on and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries.

SEC. 3. That on and after the passage of this act the same tonnage taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid upon vessels coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago which are required by law to be levied, collected, and paid upon vessels coming into the United States from foreign countries: Provided, however, That until otherwise provided by law, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States.

SEC. 4. That the duties and taxes collected in the Philippine Archipelago in pursures of this act less the cost of collecting the serve and the green in the serve and the green ine the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States.

SEC. 4. That the duties and taxes collected in the Philippine Archipelago in pursuance of this act, less the cost of collecting the same, and the gross amount of all collections of duties and taxes in the United States upon articles coming from the Philippine Archipelago and upon vessels coming therefrom, shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, but shall be held as a separate fund and paid into the treasury of the Philippine Islands, to be used and expended for the government and benefit of said islands.

SEC. 5. That when duties prescribed by this act are based upon the weight of merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse, said duties shall be levied and collected upon the weight of such merchandise at the time of its entry.

SEC. 6. That all articles manufactured in bonded manufacturing warehouses in whole or in part of imported materials, or of materials subject to internal-revenue tax and intended for shipment from the United States to the Philippine Islands, shall, when so shipped, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be exempt from internal-revenue tax, and shall not be charged with duty except the duty levied under such requestions as the secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be exported to a foreign country without the payment of such tax, or with benefit of drawback, as the case may be, may also be shipped to the Philippine Islands with like privilege, under such regulations and the filing of such bonds, bills of lading, and other security as the Commissioner of Internal Bevenue may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

That where imported materials on which duties have been paid are used in the manufacture of articles manufactured or produced in the United States, there shall be allowed on the shipment of

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as its title indicates, is a measure to temporarily provide revenues for the government and benefit of the Philippine Islands. It becomes necessary at this time because of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding "the Philippine Islands not being forthe United States holding "the Philippine Islands not being for-eign territory, and the existing law for the collection of tariff duties including only those articles imported" from foreign coun-tries, that it does not apply to imports from the Philippine Islands, and that no collection of duties upon such imports can be made. But the bill goes further than that. It gives the force of an act of Congress to the tariff act already enacted by the Philippine Commission. That act depends for its force upon the war power of the Government and also upon the legislation of Congress on of the Government and also upon the legislation of Congress on what is known as the Spooner amendments, giving the Executive authority to legislate, to execute the laws, and to exercise judicial functions in the Philippine Islands. The war power arose from the fact that within ten days of the cession of these islands by Spain-on the 15th of February-a conspiracy was formed to overthrow the power of the United States—in the language of the conspirators, to massacre the army, and after they were out of the way to massacre the inhabitants of Manila who were not Filipinos. This made the Philippine Islands hostile territory. This, under the law of nations, and under the repeated decisions of the Supreme Court, gave the war power to the Executive of this country to gov-ern those islands with a military government, or, at his discretion, to govern them by appointing persons from civil life to execute the offices.

The organized opposition to the Government of the United States was overthrown in March, 1900, and since then the war on the part of the Filipinos has been a guerrilla warfare-sporadic, spasmodic, and at times carried on with great cruelty and with-out any regard on the part of some of these men to the rules of civilized warfare. As the insurgent forces were dispersed the civilized warfare. As the insurgent forces were dispersed the President of the United States thought it best to serd out to these islands the Philippine Commission, known as the Taft Commission, which was appointed March 16, 1900, and which reached the islands about the 1st day of September of that year. These commissioners were instructed generally by the year. These commissiones.

President.

Those instructions are varied in their character.

Those instructions the judicial, the executive, and the property of vided for separating the judicial, the executive, and the legislative power; for the establishment of government where it could be done in the different cities and towns and provinces of the island. They provided generally for giving to the Filipinos a good and, for the time being, a stable and honest and equitable government throughout all the islands, and for levying such taxes and imposts as, in the judgment of the Commission, should be right and nec-

Afterwards, on the 2d day of March, 1901, the Spooner amendments were passed, amplifying the power of the President of the United States, enforcing the authority which the President already had under the military power of the Government by the legislative arm of the Government, and legislating to him the full authority, which he already perhaps possessed under the military power. Under this power the Taft Commission was authorized to impose taxes. We found when we went there a tariff law in force under the old Spanish régime.

Some of the duties imposed by that law were very high, especially the duties upon the necessaries of life. The Commission went to work almost immediately to gather information, to amend the old Spanish tariff code, and to make it more suitable to American ideas, American possession, and American government. Percan ideas, American possession, and American government. Perhaps I should note some of the changes which they finally made by the act which they passed on the 17th of September last and which took effect on the 15th of last month in regard to some articles of food. The Spanish tariff was collected in pesos, two of which were about equal to an American dollar and are received in exchange for an American dollar. The duty on flour was 3.75 pesos for every kilo, which was equivalent to 220 pounds or a barrel of flour. Instead of enumerating these different duties in pesos, I will state them in American money, so that members may pesos, I will state them in American money, so that members may see the contrast between the old Spanish tariff and the tariff enacted by the Philippine Commission.

By the Spanish tariff the duty on flour was $1.88; by the tariff of the Commission it is 50 cents. The duty on rice, unhusked, for the same quantity was, under the Spanish tariff, 59 cents; under the tariff of the Commission, 40 cents. On rice, husked, the Spanish duty was 63 cents; the Commission duty, 50 cents. On hams, smoked meats, and like articles the Spanish duty was $9.13 per 220 pounds; reduced by the Commission to $3. On lard the Spanish duty was $9.13; reduced by the Commission to $1.60. On meat, salted, the Spanish duty was $4.82; reduced by the Commission to 75 cents.

A great deal of care was exercised by this Commission in fixing these rates. In the first place, they made what they called a tentative bill, which was published and widely distributed in the Philippine Islands and criticisms invited. Then this bill was amended, due regard being given to the criticisms which were offered. Then the bill came here and was published by the War Department in saveral hundred trade journals throughout the Department in several hundred trade journals throughout the United States, criticisms being invited and received. The War Department recommended some amendments, and sent all these criticisms and all the other information obtained to the Commission. After the bill had been considered, back and forth, with such light as was thrown upon it in this public way, for more than a year, the Commission finally enacted their tariff.

Now, this tariff is not only a duty upon imports into the Philippine Islands, but embraces also a small duty upon some exports from the Philippine Islands, such as hemp, sugar, tobacco, and so forth—a continuation of the Spanish method of taxation. The entire sum realized from these export duties since the occupation of the islands by the United States is $1,700,000, while the total tariff receipts for the whole period of occupation down to the 30th of June last amounts to $15,525,000. So that the export tax was not comparatively large, and the export tax is nearly the only direct tax that is collected in the Philippine Islands.

The Taft Commission looked about to see if there was not some mode of internal taxation which would be more just and equitable and more in accordance with American ideas, and what did they find? Why, although there are 73,000,000 acres of land in the Philippine Islands, only about 5,000,000 acres are claimed to be held by private ownership; and of these a large portion of the owners have no title which they can prove at all. The old Spanish grants and the old Spanish titles seem to be a sort of thing that they paid no particular attention to and attached no particular value to; so that if you attempted a land tax you would be putting a tax upon land to which the reputed owners had no title, and there were difficulties from the outset, in the very beginning of our government there, in imposing anything like a land tax. So it seemed to them best, in raising revenue for the people of those islands, giving them the least disturbance and the least trouble, to continue this export tax.

Now, I confess when I read this export tax, it was not in accordance with my notion of things. Of course it was not prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits an export tax on articles exported from a State, because no one will contend that the Philippine Islands are a State. This limitawin content that the rimippine islands are a State. This imitation is found among the limitations placed and powers conferred upon Congress, preventing Congress from exacting an export tax on articles exported from a State.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I suppose so.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Is this not the fact, that when sugar and tobacco are shipped from the Philippine Islands an export tax is levied on them, and then when they reach the United States an import tax is also levied on them, so that there is a double tax?

Mr. PAYNE. I am very much obliged to my friend, Mr. Chairman, but that does not elucidate the subject at all.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am just asking if that is not the fact?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, but that makes it no clearer.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Is it or is it not a fact?
Mr. PAYNE. Why, certainly it is a fact. I said so.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. It shows our beneficence toward the Filipinos when we tax them twice on their exports.

Mr. PAYNE. I supposed you understood that. I thought I

Mr. PAYNE. I supposed you understood that. I thought I stated it very clearly.

Mr. CANNON. It all goes into the Treasury, however.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee thought that if they had had time to consider this subject, with what little experience they have had during the past few years in tariff matters, perhaps they might have gotten up a better bill than the Taft Commission presents here; but I want to say that after carefully attained that hill with the light that was have before a said. fully studying that bill, with the light that we have before us and with the light that we could get from the Philippine Islands, it would be very difficult for the Committee on Ways and Means to improve much on this American measure that the Taft Commission have inaugurated.
Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. PAYNE. Yes,

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, if it is a question.
Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Do you not think you would have made a much better bill if you had waited for the publication of the Taft Commission report, which is now being put into

Mr. PAYNE. Not at all. I have a copy of the Taft report, and if I am permitted I shall print in the RECORD what they say upon this question.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Do not you think it would be fair to the members of the House if they had the advantage of looking at the Taft report before voting upon this question? Is there any great necessity for rushing this thing through without getting proper light on the subject?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is taking considerable time, and

I only want to say to him that the necessity upon us was to act at once, to frame a tariff measure before his constituents and my constituents could import tobacco and sugar and what not from the Philippine Islands free of duty into the United States, and we the Philippine Islands free of duty into the United States, and we could not wait for the Taft Commission report to be printed for the use of gentlemen. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, in addition to this we found that by the decision of the court and the ruling of the Treasury the ports of Porto Rico as well as the ports of the Philippine Islands and the ports of the United States were in such relation that the coastwise of the United States were in such relation that the coastwise laws applied, and that under the law no vessel carrying a foreign flag could bring goods from the Philippine Islands to any port in the United States. We take care of that in this bill; but we hope the time will soon come, and we are assured that it will soon come, when American citizens will furnish American vessels, to be sailed under the American flag, fully equal to the demand, to carry all the commerce coming from the Philippine Islands to the ports of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] And when that time comes, this side of the House will see to it that these coastwise laws are extended to the ports of the Philippine Islands, as well as to all other ports that are under the flag of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to this, in the last section of the bill we have endeavored to apply the drawback laws, providing for drawbacks in duties and in internal-revenue collections, and also to apply the exemption laws for goods manufactured in bonded warehouses, to the shipment of goods from United States ports to the ports of the Philippine Islands.

Then we have provided, as in the Porto Rican bill, that all these taxes collected in the Philippine Islands, and all duties collected in the Philippine Islands, and all duties collected in the Philippine Islands. in the United States upon goods brought from the Philippine Islands into the United States, shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury, but be paid into the treasury of the Philippine Islands for the use and benefit of the Philippine Islands

Mr. Chairman, our people have made great progress in the Philippine Islands since the Commission went there in the way of establishing forms of government. In the first place, they have established municipal government. In the first place, they have established municipal governments in 765 of the towns or town-ships in the Philippine Islands. Some of these are villages, some are large tracts of country, representing, perhaps, a county in the United States. In these towns there is a president, a vice-president, and a certain number of councilors, and they have provided that these officers of a town shall be elected by the vote of the Filipinos.

Any man who held office of a certain grade under the Spanish rule is entitled to a vote; any man having real estate to the value of 300 pesos shall be entitled to a vote; any man that paid taxes of 30 pesos a year is entitled to a vote. Any man who can read, write, and speak either the Spanish language or the English lanwrite, and speak etcher the Spanish language of the English language is entitled to a vote. So you see, my friends upon the other side of the Chamber, that they are quite liberal down there in extending the suffrage, even as liberal as they are in some of the States south of the old line. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. And no "grandfather" clause.

Mr. PAYNE. It is suggested over here that there is no "grandfather".

father" clause, and perhaps they have been narrow and restricted in this respect.

Then they have established provisional governments in which the common interests of many municipalities are united under the government. In addition to that, they have finally, under the direction of the President, established a governor for all the Philippine Islands, in the person of Judge Taft, extending to all the islands not under the military jurisdiction, and his jurisdiction has been extended over an area of 74,000 square miles, including 58 per cent of the territory of the islands, and over nearly 5,000,000 of

And then they have established courts. First, a supreme court, composed of a chief justice and six associate justices. The chief justice is a distinguished Filipino lawyer, the most distinguished Filipino lawyer in the archipelago. The supreme court has a jurisdiction in all appeals from the district courts, of which I will speak in a moment. It also has original jurisdiction to issue speak in a moment. It also has original jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition, mandamus, certiorari, habeas corpus, and all writs of promotion, mandamus, certorari, nabeas corpus, and an the writs known to our law in this country. Under them are the district courts, which are provided in fourteen districts. They are not called district courts, but "courts of the first instance." They have original jurisdiction in all civil actions involving a hundred dollars or more, and in all criminal proceedings where the punishment is more than a hundred dollars fine or six months' imprisonment.

In addition to this, in all the townships they have organized courts of justices of the peace. These justices courts have the minor cases not included in the jurisdiction of the district courts. The cases not included in the jurisdiction of the district courts. The district courts have jurisdiction of appeals from the courts of the justices of the peace, and they also have original jurisdiction to issue all the various writs known to the law. The justices of the peace are Filipinos, all of them. The chief justice of the supreme court is a Filipino, and two of his associates are Filipinos. Many of the justices of the courts of first instance are Filipinos also. Then they have established—

Mr. ROBB. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield

Mr. PAYNE. I do.
Mr. ROBB. Is there any provision, where a Federal question is raised, to appeal from the jurisdiction of the Filipino courts to the United States Supreme Court?
Mr. PAYNE. I am not able to answer the gentleman. I will refer him to the statutes passed by the Philippine Commission, 283 in number, and which I have not as yet had the pleasure or time to peruse.

Then, Mr. Chairman, they have established a police and constabulary force in these various islands which have come under the simil invisdiction of the United States. The police force is located in those cities and townships and composed enact. There are Filipinos. The constabulary force is a grade higher. There are from 15 to 150 in each one of these 14 districts. They have a chief—I do not remember now the name by which he is called—the contraction over this constabulary force. They have a who has authority over this constabulary force. They have a force of inspectors, who inspect not only the constabulary force, but the police in the towns. In a word, they have organized a force of over 6,000 natives, who perform the duties of constable and police, to suppress riot, to suppress those engaged therein or in any manner breaking the law, located among these various towns and in these various provinces, and all of them, except the chief of constabulary and his assistants, or nearly all of them, are native Filinipose. native Filipinos.

The Secretary of War says that this force as an organized body, as built up in these islands, will displace the use of the army in preserving order in these sections of the Philippine Islands, and he is hopeful, if this movement is continued, that it will prove in the future as it has in the past, safe to trust to the organization of these native Filipinos to preserve the peace and preserve law and order, which is the first thing it was our duty to do and to maintain when we took hold of the Philippine Islands. Of course this is in its infancy, formed in the last fifteen months gradually, but the expense increases, and the expense must be met promptly by a sufficient revenue bill to bring enough revenue into the treas ury of the islands to pay for this large and increasing expense.

In addition to this they have been overhauling the accounting and auditing system, reducing the expenditures of money, and, in a word, they have already established there on the islands, and all treasuries of the government there, an accounting an audditing system similar to the one so long in use by the Treasury of the United States and so well hedged about by critical large.

existing laws

The next thing in importance to law and order is the question of education of the Filipinos, because if we are to give these peo ple any benefit because of our relations to them; if we are to decide ple any beneat because of our relations to them; if we are to decide in the future to establish their relations to us, and what form of government they are to have, whether they are to govern them-selves or to be governed as a Territory, as a part of the United States, any question that may come up involving the rights and liberties of those people, the very foundation of that question, the very foundation of their safety, lies in the building of American school benefic and equivalent them with American school benefic and teachers. schoolhouses and equipping them with American school-teachers. [Loud applause.]

These people are eager to learn. One hundred and fifty thousand children are enrolled in common schools because the object is to give a common school education to each one of these children. With 150,000 school children, the Commission thus far has been able to provide schoolhouses for only 75,000 of them. The demand is imminent. We must have the money to build these school-houses and properly equip them. In addition to this we have provided 1,000 American school-teachers to go out there, with a salary of from $75 to $125 a month, leaving their homes and going to those far-off islands to teach these young Filipinos the rudiments of education.

Then we have in addition to this between 3,000 and 4,000 native teachers also teaching these children; and of these native teachers 2,000 of them are in the night schools now learning the English language, so as to be able to teach the English language to these Filipino children. [Applause.]

They have established in the city of Manila a normal school and made accommodations for 350 children; but so great was the demand that they had to double the capacity with an enrollment demand that they had to double the capacity with an enrollment of 600 pupils in this normal school with a regular attendance of 570, so eager were they to learn the English language and prepare themselves to teach the Filipino children. They opened a night school in Manila with an enrollment at once of 10,000, and the Secretary of War said the other day that from reports he had received the number must now be at least 25,000. They are going into these night schools and learning the English language and rudiments of education to fit themselves for citizenship; to fit themselves for the higher duties and higher obligations that will come to them because of their contact with the American will come to them because of their contact with the American Government. [Applause.]

An agricultural school has already been established in the island of Negros, and a school for the industrial arts in the city of Manila. Our people have been marching right forward in this matter of education, and while our friends on the other side have been hallooing about imperialism and about the terrible oppression. sion that we were exercising toward the Filipino people, we have been trying to lift them up toward the stature of the American citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York yield a moment?
Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you fitting these people for the citizenship of the United States or the citizenship of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, my friend, we will cross that bridge when we come to it, and if you will cooperate with us, we will fit them for the citizenship of the Philippine Islands, or the citizenship of the United States, or of any other country. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When you carry the Constitution

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When you carry the Constitution and flag there we will join with you, and not until then.

Mr. PAYNE. Great heavens, Mr. Chairman, I am surprised!
I knew that the gentleman from Tennessee had been in the Philippine Islands. Is it possible that he did not carry the Constitution and flag with him? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] lican side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, yes; your party sent them there, but you would not acknowledge it. They were sent 50,000 copies of the Constitution and Declaration of Independence there in a stealthy and covert way. You did not dare to let the public know about it, but I found it out while there, and I am going to ow it up. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. PAYNE. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Tennessee, during his short visit to those islands, will be able to tell us vastly more about them than all the officers of the Army, all the members of the Taft Commission, and all the Americans that have lived there during the last two and a half ears. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, to resume. Our people are building roads here. Why, Mr. Chairman, they have in these islands at least 40,000,000 acres of the finest timber. Some Spanish authorities make it over 50,000,000 acres. Most of it belongs to the United States. It belonged to Spain, and Spain ceded it to us. It is growing there. Some of the houses of the inhabitants have been destroyed during the war, and they have to have lumber to rebuild them. Do they go into the forests and cut down the trees and saw them up into lumber and build their houses? No. They are importing the lumber from the United States. More than a million feet was brought in last year by the United States Government for their use, because there is no way to get out the lumber from the forests. There are no railroads and few highways. Our people have gone to work building roads, and roads are expensive in southern countries. They have to be built upon honor to with-stand the floods that are liable to carry them away. They must be of the most substantial kind. We are already building a milliondollar road in those islands.

When the Spooner amendment was passed in some other body an amendment was tacked onto it that would not allow a railroad to be built in the Philippine Islands; that would not allow a bank to be chartered; that would not allow any corporation to be chartered, but tied up and paralyzed business. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] wanted to know if there was anything for the Insular Committee to do. There is much that it could do to emancipate these islands and send over there, as the President says, the captains of industry and bring out the wealth of the Philippine Islands.

These forests are under a law of Spain, similar to the German forest reservation act, which only allows the matured trees to be cut up from year to year. The law was rather lightly enforced by the Spanish Government, but our people have been trying to enforce it to the letter, and they say that by only cutting out the mature trees in those islands we will get a product of 16,800,000,000 feet of lumber each year.

That is three times the entire cut of the United States in 1900. Some one figured it the other day at $20 a thousand. Taking that as a basis of calculation it would make over $300,000,000 a year on those 50,000,000 acres. Those forests embrace mahogany, ebony, over a hundred varieties of hard wood, some of them very curious and very valuable, and pine. That is the growth of those islands. islands. Those roads necessary for internal commerce are being built. But the crying necessity, a greater necessity for those islands than the construction of roads, is the necessity of improving the harbors. Take the harbor of Manila: A vessel drawing more than 16 feet, entering the harbor of Manila, has to anchor about 2 miles from the dock, and the goods are taken to the dock in lighters. Why, it costs more to ship goods from Hongkong, a distance of 800 miles, and land them on the Manila docks than it does to ship a cargo from San Francisco and send it 8,000 miles to Hongkong and land it on the docks there. Our people can not stand that kind of business. They have gone to work and got a contract calling for an expenditure of two or three million dollars.

After due advertising and the receiving of a great many bids, a contract has been made for improving Manila Harbor so that a vessel of 30 feet draft may tie up at the docks and land goods after a civilized fashion of carrying on business. This will need money, and it will be needed in the immediate future; because whatever connection the United States may have with the Philippine Islands I want it to be for the good of the whole people of the Philippine Archipelago.

There are about 73,000,000 acres of land in the Philippine Islands, of which all but 5,000,000 are owned by the Government. The other 5,000,000 acres are claimed by private ownership. Of these 5,000,000 acres 403,000 are claimed by the friars. Now, the friar problem is one of the hardest problems in the Philippine Islands' business and administration. The friars claim to own these lands. Their title in many instances is shaky; in many instances their title has been last made to the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract the contract their title has been last made to say the contract their title has been last made to say the contract the contra stances their title has been lost or destroyed. They have been renting these lands to the people who occupy them, and these people, occupying them from generation to generation, have come to believe that they have as much title to the land as the friars ever had, and they do not like to pay the rent. They are having there the old anti-rent troubles, such as they had in my own State seventy-five years ago, and with a good deal of the same result.

There is a feeling of hatred between the people who occupy the land and the friars who collect the rent from them. A good deal of the trouble of administration in the Philippine Islands arises from the hatred toward the friars, growing out of their ownership or their claimed ownership of these 403,000 acres. The Government there has been trying to extinguish the title of the friars by giving them a fair equivalent for what they own or what they claim to own. The Government has been trying to clean up and clear up this question with justice to the friars and justice to the men who till the land and who believe that they have a better title to the land than the friars. As fast as the Government can get title it is proposed to sell the lands on easy terms to the get title it is proposed to sell the lands on easy terms to the people who occupy them—terms that they will accept—thus bringing about a state of peace among all the communities in the Philippine Islands. This will take money, and the money must come from the revenues of the islands.

I think I have proceeded far enough to convince you that we need revenue, and need it at once, to carry on the beneficent work that the United States Government and the Taft Commission have undertaken in the Philippine Islands. We have some money on undertaken in the Philippine Islands. We have some money on There are some $6,800,000 hand. It has not all been used up. now in the Treasury. A part of it is appropriated. The $2,000,000 needed to complete the work in the harbor at Manila must be taken from that amount; and then the tariff law of the Taft Commission is so much milder, the rates are so much lower than the former rates, that the Commission believe, and I think rightly, that there will be less revenue for the period beginning the 15th of November last than there was under the old Spanish tariff, until the time comes when, by the doubling-up process which has been in vogue there since we took possession of those islands, the imports will be so great as to furnish us a larger revenue under this reduction in rates.

Now, what do our friends on the other side say to all this?

Well, we can not get much idea of their attitude unless we take the views of the minority of the committee as representing them. They do not assume to criticise the bill except to say that we are enforcing the Dingley rates on goods coming from the Philippine Islands and that the Dingley law is "the mother of trusts." Well, that expression is not new; it is not original. The greatest authority for that statement is Mr. Havemeyer, the president of the American Sugar Refining Company—sometimes called a trust. What relation has the tariff to a trust? The tariff encourages industry; the tariff builds up business. If there were no business, of course there could not be any trusts. But I defy If there were any man to show that the tariff produces trusts in any other way than that it creates business, and there must be business conditions to attract the operations of enterprise and capital. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why, sir, suppose we compare ourselves with "free-trade England." Are there no trusts in England? In Heaven's name, what is it creates all the trusts in "free-trade England?" There is business there; and the modern tendency of business interests is to the aggregation of capital.

Mr. WHEELER. I think I can answer the gentleman briefly.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, let the gentleman answer me in his own

Mr. WHEELER. I do not intend to occupy more than a moment.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield for that.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to ask a question.
Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman can not make any speech in my

Mr. WHEELER. I shall not attempt it.

Mr. PAYNE. How many times must I tell the gentleman he can not make a speech in my time?

Mr. WHEELER. I dezire to ask the gentleman a question. I wish to propound this inquiry: Is it not the assurance on the part of the aggregated capital of America that a Republican Attorney-General of the United States will not do his duty? Is it not this that creates and fosters trusts in the United States? [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I will let the gentleman answer his own question; it is beyond me. Of course he does not believe what his question suggests, and he knows that I do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, I believe it, and I am quite satisfied that the gentleman believes it as well as I do.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, then, I did not know what the gentleman believes; and he evidently does not know what I believe.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think anybody else knows what you believe

Mr. PAYNE. I will go on if the gentleman will allow me. The gentlemen of the minority in their report make an argument on the commercial side of this question. They say that the war in the Orient will cost up to the 1st day of July next $450,000,000. I wonder where they got their statistics. That is, the war in the Philippines and the trouble we had in China cost $450,-000,000! Why, bless your soul, the increased cost of all the war, the Spanish war and the continuation in the Philippines, if you please to call it so, will not amount to $450,000,000 on the 1st of

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PAYNE. No; I can not yield; my time is so nearly up.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield any further.

Over against that they say that we are getting about $5,000,000 trade, and at 20 per cent that would amount to a million dollars, and so we are getting the worst of the bargain. I wonder what those gentlemen who signed that report would have done if they had lived in the time of Thomas Jefferson, about a hundred years ago, when he spent $15,000,000 in making the Louisiana purchase. They would have figured it out that the trade with the Indians perhaps would not amount to more than two or three hundred dollars a year, and hence that it was a poor bargain on the com-mercial side. They never could have looked forward to see the magnificent States, the grand cities, the countless farms, and the uncounted riches that have come to the United States from the Louisiana purchase. I suppose, however, that to-day they would admit that as a commercial transaction the Louisiana purchase was not a failure

Suppose they had lived in the time of Seward, when he paid $7,200,000 for Alaska. How they would have reechoed the cry, "$7,200,000 for fields of snow and ice." But Charles Sumner marshaled the facts before the Senate of the United States; and marshaled the facts before the Senate of the Chites states, if you will read that grand speech of his to-day you will see it was prophetic of the fact that Alaska has paid for herself every year what she produces for the people of the United States. [Approphetic of the fact that Alaska has paid for herself every year from what she produces for the people of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] I do not know what the future of these islands is to be. If there is any truth about the condition of the forests there, it will not take a great while to pay even the expense that the minority put upon it.

But then they speak about the loss of life in these islands, and we all sympathize when they speak of that. These five gentlemen who signed this minority report were here in the winter of men who signed this minority report were here in the winter of 1898. Then they were clamoring for recognition from the Speaker, for what? Why, they wanted to pass a resolution that would declare war with Spain and send our troops to Cuba and put them under the command of a Cuban general. Did the appalling spectacle of the loss of life frighten these gentlemen at that time? There were gentlemen on this side who sympathized with the company of the standard product of the company of the standard product of t with them. There were those on this side who stood by our patriotic President in the endeavor to stem the tide of war, believing that we could bring about the freedom of Cuba without the loss of a single American life. The Maine was destroyed. The board reported that it came from an outside source, and the country was aflame for war. War was declared. Our boys went down there, and by the thousands they were slain, either by the weapons of war or by foul disease and disaster. They perished. Some of the best American blood was left on Cuban soil. We have been trying to work out the problems with these Cubans ever since. If we can lift them up to the plane of good govern-ment, if we can give them a republic worthy of the name, if they shall prove capable of governing themselves and taking an honored place among the nations of the world, who shall say that

With the close of the war we found not only Spain at our feet, but we found the Philippine Islands there, and the question was, What shall we do with them? The people there were distracted, divided, fighting among themselves. They were an easy prey to any despotism that might come along and gather them in. any despotism that might come along and gather them in. What shall we do with them? Your party helped us to solve the question then. They furnished enough Democratic votes in the Senate to ratify the treaty. In order to make the treaty effective an appropriation of money was required, and so an appropriation bill appropriating $20,000,000 to carry out the terms of the treaty came into this House for our action. A large majority of gentlemen on the other side voted for the appropriation to make the treaty complete and give us control of the oriation to make the treaty complete and give us control of the Philippine Islands.

Philippine Islands.

We have been pursuing the only course we could pursue, trying to restore law and order, trying to give them peace, trying to educate their children and their men and their women, trying to lift them are and we invite your help even at this late day. Do not stop with the parrot cry of imperialism. Look into the matter. Look into the condition of these people. See what is best for them and for us under the circumstances. Approach the question like patriots and do a patriotic duty in all the measures that may come before this Congress relative to the Philippine Islands. Then we will work out the problem, and we will work it out by lifting this race, by educating them, by making them fit for citizenship; and some day, in this generation or another, in the providence of God it will appear that the blood of the heroic men who laid down their lives in the Philippine Islands has not been shed in vain.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, the Republican party of this country has definitely determined to enter into a system of colo-When this question was last up nial conquest and government. for debate in this House we of the opposition contended that such a policy was not only unwise and dangerous to the continued liberty and prosperity of our people, but also not permissible under the plain provisions of our Federal Constitution. Recently the Supreme Court of the United States, by a decision reversing former decisions, has seen proper to amend the Federal Constitu-tion and declare that Congress can govern acquired territory outside the prohibitions and requirements of the Constitution. has specifically decided that that clause in the Constitution which declares that "all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States" applies to the States only and not to the Territories and other possessions.

By this decision it declares that Congress has power to impose duties upon goods coming from the Territories into the States and also from the States into the Territories. It confers upon Congress absolute power of taxation in the Territories, unrestrained by any provision in the Federal Constitution. By a more recent decision the court has declared that the Philippine Islands and other possessions are not foreign but domestic territory, and, as the Dingley bill, by its terms, limits its collection of duties to importations from foreign countries, it does not apply to the Philippines; hence no duty can be collected on importa-tions from those islands until Congress shall so direct. Ever tions from those islands until Congress shall so direct. Ever since we have had control of these islands, until this decision, the duties imposed by the Dingley bill have been collected on all goods brought into this country from them. This bill proposes to continue the rates of the Dingley bill upon all importations into this country from the Philippine Islands.

In this respect it proposes to treat those islands and their inhabitants absolutely as foreigners. Their commerce, their trade, and their importations are to be subjected to the same heavy exactions, the same rigorous restrictions that are applied to strangers. Another provision of this bill first absolutely all another provisions. other provision of this bill fixes absolutely all customs duties to be collected on importations into the Philippines, and, in addition, an export duty on certain goods when shipped from there. This feature of the bill treats the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands as subjects of this country, to be governed absolutely by the will of Congress. Thus, by this bill, when concessions and trade benefits are needed by the unfortunate inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, they are treated as strangers and foreigners, but when exactions and taxations are to be imposed, they are treated as subjects. This irreconcilable, dual position of subject and stranger is created by this bill and illustrates the policy of the Republican The principles party in the formulation of its colonial system. upon which such a bill is founded are repugnant to every princile of justice and right and antagonistic to all our traditions and institutions

By this bill Congress assumes the right and does exercise the power to fix the rates and the conditions upon which the goods of the Philippines can be sold in the markets of the United States and also the rates and conditions upon which our goods can be sold in the markets of those islands. In other words, we practically fix the price at which they must sell their goods to us and also the price at which they must purchase ours. This is pre-cisely the same power that was claimed by the British Parliament when we were colonies. The British Parliament then contended that the power of Parliament was absolute in the American colonies and that Parliament had the right to impose taxes here and to fix the duty on importations from the colonies into Great Britain and also the duty on importations from Great Britain

Our fathers denounced this assumption of power as tyranny and despotism. When it was sought to be exercised they rebelled, separated themselves from Great Britain, and established this Union. Our fathers contended that the vast power to control absolutely the trade and commerce, all the buying and the selling of the commodities of one nation by another, is such a dangerous power, so liable to abuse, that no just nation would ever try to exercise it, and that it should never be conceded. [Applause.] Yet by this bill this Congress will exercise, in a more aggravated form, precisely the same power claimed and sought to be exercised against us by the British Parliament when we were colonies. Great Britain could not have succeeded in the Revolutionary war without destroying British institutions and ultimately the liberty and freedom of her people. We can not enact this bill without destroying our institutions, without abandoning all our glorious traditions and perverting our principles of justice and liberty, which have been the foundations of our governmental structure. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, let us examine this bill in detail and see if, in exercising the vast power of Congress, the scale of justice will be balanced evenly between the inhabitants of the United States and those of the Philippine Islands. Those who advocate this policy in reference to the Philippines are perpetually proclaiming their good intentions and benevolent purposes toward those people. They assert that they intend to give them a full measure of justice and opportunity for development and progress. Let us measure declarations with deeds, let us compare promises and performances, let us examine party platforms with party legislation, and by these ascertain the real disposition of those at present in power toward the Philippine Islands. This bill, as I have said before fixes the duty more Philippine goods whemismorted here power toward the Philippine Islands. This bill, as I have said before, fixes the duty upon Philippine goods when imported here and also the duty upon United States goods when imported there. Let us compare the duties thus imposed, and we will get some idea of the injustice and great discriminations of this bill. One of the great industries of the Philippine Islands is tobacco. We are also a tobacco producing and exporting country. This bill permits our tobacco to be exported and sold in the Philippine Islands upon the payment of a duty of 22 cents per pound; yet, by this bill, their tobacco can be imported here and sold in our Islands upon the payment of a duty of 22 cents per pound; yet, by this bill, their tobacco can be imported here and sold in our markets only on the payment of a duty of $1.85 per pound in addition to a heavy export duty. One of the enterprises of these islands is the manufacture of cigars. By this bill, our cigars, when sold in their markets, will have to pay a duty of only 88 cents per pound, while theirs, when imported here and sold in our markets, will be required to pay a duty of $4.50 per pound and, in addition, an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent, with also an export duty. Hemp is another one of their large industries. Our hemp can enter their markets with a duty of $11 per ton, while theirs when sold here must pay a duty of $20 per ton.

Another one of their large industries is sugar raising. Under this bill we can import sugar there from the United States, from this bill we can import sugar there from the United States, from Porto Rico, and from Hawaii upon the payment of about $17 per Porto Rico, and from Hawaii upon the payment of about $17 per ton, while their sugar when sold here or in either of the two islands named must pay an exorbitant duty of about $36 per ton in addition to an export duty. We are told that these islands have fine deposits of minerals, which in time will bring to them great wealth. Let us see how this bill proposes to encourage and develop the mineral interests of the Philippines. Under this bill our iron ore can be shipped there upon the payment of a duty of 25 cents per ton, while on theirs will be required a duty of 67 cents per ton. An examination will show that the same glaring cents per ton. An examination will show that the same glaring discriminations, the same gross injustice, exist all through the schedules of this bill.

The rates of duty imposed here on importations from the Philippine Islands are, from one end of this bill to the other, heavy, exorbitant, and restrictive. They are such as can give no encouragement to enterprise there, no development to trade or commerce. The duties imposed on importations from this country into the Philippines are such as it is thought will benefit those who are especially engaged in exploiting the islands for their own enrichment. I will guarantee that no bill was ever before presented to a legislative body intrusted with power to fix absolutely the commercial relations between two peoples which was so oppressive in its exactions upon the one people who are helpless and powerless and at the same time so generous in its concessions to the people who alone are possessed of the power.

Every line of this bill bristles with inequality. The American people are too just and humane to approve its unfair and oppressive provisions. They have no desire to despoil the poor and people are too just and numane to approve its unfair and oppressive provisions. They have no desire to despoil the poor and wretched Filipinos. The paltry profits of the unjust trade relations here sought to be established would be poor recompense to us for loss of reputation for just and humane treatment to the helpless and dependent. [Applause.] I invoke those religious people of this country whose only desire in the matter is to better these people to pass judgment upon this pernicious bill. This bill carries to these people no blessings, no benefits. It gives no encouragement to enterprise, no stimulus to development. It brings to them the burdens that we refused to bear ourselves. They witness a Congress, 8,000 miles from them, in which they have no voice, no representative, absolutely controlling their commerce, fixing their trade relations, imposing taxes—all without consulting their wishes or regarding their interests. This bill is worse in principle, worse in every feature, than any legislation the Brit-in principle, worse in every feature, than any legislation the British Parliament ever sought to enact against the American colonies.

If this country shall fix the duties and the conditions upon which Philippine goods shall enter the markets of this country, a legislative body representing the Filipinos should certainly fix the duties and conditions upon which our goods shall enter their markets. To deny this is to deny every elementary principle of justice and right. We inherited it from our British ancestors and have persistently maintained that the records who cepte of justice and right. We inherited it from our British ancestors and have persistently maintained that the people who pay taxes should impose them. Charles I of England lost his crown and his head in trying to deprive the English people of this inherent right. [Applause.]

If Congress is determined permanently to hold the Philippine Islands and never to accord to them independence, it should at once create a just and liberal territorial government for the islands representing these nearly and their interests, which should islands, representing these people and their interests, which should be empowered to impose taxes and customs duties there. If we are to have colonial possessions, let us at least follow the present liberal and generous policy of Great Britain, and not the narrow and oppressive one pursued by Spain.

This bill adopts Spanish and not British methods of dealing with colonies. This illiberal policy will produce the same discontent, the same rebellion which ever prevailed in Spanish colonies. tent, the same rebellion which ever prevailed in Spanish colonies. As we are now told that peace exists in the Philippines, there is no excuse for not according these people a liberal territorial government with powers of imposing taxation and other administration. To grant this at once would go far toward reconciling those people to our sovereignty. I appeal to those who are bent upon this policy to let our first experiment in colonial government be marked by liberality, not selfishness; by breadth, not narrowness; by justice, not iniquity. The fit place for such a bill as this is the Cortes of Spain, and not the Congress of the United States. [Applanse]

[Applause.]
This bill is so indefensible that its authors apologize for it and him that it is only a temporary measure. This measure should claim that it is only a temporary measure. This measure should not disgrace—even for a day—the statute books of a free and enlightened people. Besides, the enterprises and industries of the Philippines can not be promoted or benefited by legislation which its authors claim they intend to change soon. Capital will not invest in the islands; enterprises will not be undertaken; trade and commerce will not grow, so long as uncertainty exists and changes are contemplated. Justice, wisdom, and business sense require that at this time a definite and permanent policy in reference to the trade and commercial relations of these islands should be fixed. There will be no development and no progress there until this is accomplished. Temporary measures only increase uncertainty and unrest; they bring no relief.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that the characterization of this bill as a temporary measure is merely a pretense to persuade many to its support who could not otherwise be induced to do so. I am satisfied that this bill, if passed, will fix for years to come the commercial relations and customs duties between this country and the Philippine Islands. Besides, this measure will tend to intensify the dissatisfaction and unrest in the Philippines. These people can not be expected to quietly acquiesce in the spirit of colonial favoritism exhibited by this Government when we enact this measure. The people of the Philippine Islands will see the sugar of two of our colonies—Porto Rico and Hawaii—imported into this country and sold free of duty, while theirs must pay an exorbitant duty. They will see that the tobacco and cigars of Porto Rico are given free access to our markets while duties of Porto Rico are given free access to our markets, while duties that amount to absolute exclusion are imposed upon theirs. They will experience that this Government is engaging in colonial favoritism of which they are the least favored.

People will submit to such gross inequalities only when compelled by force to do so. Every instinct of manhood rebels against such unjust discriminations. This country can never successfully conduct a colonial system unless it is formed in justice and equality. A colony that realizes that it is receiving a less measure of justice and liberty than is being extended to others will ever be in a state of discontent and rebellion. If we are to have colonies and outlying possessions, prudence and wisdom de-mand that all should be treated alike; that there should be no

Mr. Chairman, the injustice of this bill to the people of the Philippine Islands and the indisposition on the part of the Republican party to treat them with fairness and liberality becomes more striking and glaring when we compare its provisions with the recommendations recently made by the President and the Secretary of War concerning Cuba.

The President in his annual message says that we are under moral obligations to give Cuban imports into the United States a substantial reduction from present tariff duties. The Secretary of War is even more insistent upon this than the President. The two chief products of Cuba, like those of the Philippines, are sugar and tobacco. This Administration favors a great reduction from the Dingley rates on sugar and tobacco when imported from Cuba and receptively highly probability of the principles. Cuba, and yet sustains this bill, which collects the entire Dingley rates on sugar and tobacco imported from the Philippines, and in rates on sugar and tobacco imported from the Philippines, and in addition an export duty. The American people will not sanction this. Our obligations to Cuba have been fully and completely discharged when they have established a free and independent government and we have withdrawn from the island. This will soon happen. They owe us a boundless debt of gratitude. When they were oppressed by Spain and their cause was hopeless, at a great expense and sacrifice to ourselves we espoused their cause, drove their coursessors from the island, and gave to them freedom. drove their oppressors from the island, and gave to them freedom and independence.

At much expense we have kept peace and order there and administered the government pending the formation by them of a safe and stable government. No other nation has ever bestowed upon another more generous, substantial, and disinterested favors than we have bestowed upon Cuba. With the Filipinos the case is reversed. The Filipinos had overthrown Spanish authority, except in Manila, before our troops arrived. They could have driven their oppressors from the islands without our aid. They were our valuable allies in a war that we had undertaken for the They desired to establish an independent govliberation of Cuba. ernment under our guidance, which would have made to us generous trade concessions. We denied this request, and by war and conquest extended our dominion over them. We now hold them as colonies and as a part and parcel of this country. We have granted to Cuba, and she has decided to become, a state free and independent of the form of the country. ent of us.

I can see no moral obligations on our part to make any concessions to Cuba except such as our own interest may demand. If reductions in tariff duties are to be made for the introduction of sugar and tobacco into our markets, the claims of the Philippine Islands are vastly superior to those of Cuba. The profits to be Islands are vastly superior to those of Cuba. derived from the sale of these two products in the markets of this country should certainly go, if possible, to our own people instead of to foreigners. I can not understand the wisdom of a policy that urges such generous concessions to Cuba and imposes such heavy exactions and restrictions upon the Philippines. the Philippine Islands are a part of this country, justice and wisdom both demand that their sugar and tobacco interests should be encouraged and developed rather than the sugar and tobacco interests of Cuba.

interests of Cuba. [Applause.]
But, Mr. Chairman, the hostility of the Republican party and of those in power to the Philippine Islands is further exemplified, and in a manner that can admit of no excuse, no defense. As I have previously said, this bill imposes on the sugar of the Philippines the high rates of the Dingley bill. Our Government has already signed treaties with Great Britain for the Barbados, for British Guiana, for Jamaica, and for Bermuda, which have been sent to the Senate and are being pressed by the present Administration and the Republican party for ratification, and all provide for a reduction of 12½ per cent from the duties imposed by the Dingley bill upon all sugar imported from them into the United States. A treaty has also been signed with Argentina, which has been sent to the Senate and is likewise urged for ratification, that provides for a reduction of 20 per cent from the rates of the Dingley bill on sugar imported into the United States from Argentina.

The Republican party places itself squarely before the people and the country as favoring that sugar shall be imported into this country from British possessions and from Argentina at more greatly reduced rates than it shall be imported from our own possessions in the Philippine Islands. No moral obligation can be urged for the extenuation of the extension of these rebates and privileges to foreigners while they are denied to our own people. If this policy is to prevail, in order to obtain trade advantages with the United States, it is better to be a British subject than to be a citizen of the United States. History will fail to furnish another such example where a government has so wantonly and openly ignored the rights and privileges of its own people in order to subserve foreigners and strangers. [Applause.] I believe the American people will repudiate a discrimination so suicidal, so unjust as this. They would greatly prefer consuming sugar raised by the unfortunate inhabitants of the Philippine Islands than sugar raised by British subjects.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to this Congress, to its sense of justice and right, to its prudence and its wisdom, not to inflict upon these defenseless and helpless people such hardships and such inequalities. Do not teach them that dependence on America means spoliation. Let them feel that we are their friends, not their foes; that our purposes are to aid them, not to despoil them; to encourage, and not to retard them.

Sir, this bill will continue for the future practically the same commercial relations with the Philippine Islands that have existed during the last two years. As this bill proposes to continue present conditions, it may be well to inquire what have been the profits and benefits to the United States under them. During the last calendar year, as shown by the report of the Secretary of War, the entire importations into the Philippine Islands amounted to $24,284,666. Of this amount the United States furnished $2,061,804, of which $1,102,604 was for beer, wine, and whisky.
Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me oask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Do you not know that the liquor exported from the United States to the Philippines, to which you have the point of the point of the point of the point of the philippines. have referred, is not consumed by the Philippine people, but by the people we have sent there?

Mr. SWANSON. I thank the gentlemen. Thus it is shown that the United States furnished less than one-tenth of the goods imported into the Philippines. This small amount occurred, too, during the time that we had there a large army and a great many civil officials. At present the army stationed in the Philippines numbers 43,239 men. Our total sale of goods in the Philippines did not amount to $40 per capita to our own soldiers and officials, and there can be no question that most of the goods shipped to the islands from this country consists of purchases of our own soldiers and officials. It is therefore evident that under the present trade arrangements we do not furnish our own soldiers and officials with one-fourth of what they themselves purchase.

Mr. ROBB. As I understand, no part of the revenue raised under the bill is to be used in payment of the expenses of the

Mr. SWANSON. It is to be used in the building of roads, schools, and so forth, in the Philippine Islands.

Over half of our trade with the Philippines consists of beer, wine, and whisky. The inhabitants of these islands, like the poor Indians, are having alcoholic liquors furnished them with much ease and in destructive quantities. This bill remitting the internal-revenue tax paid on beer, wine, and whisky here, when imported to the Philippines, will further encourage and stimulate the importation of these into the islands.

For this paltry trade we have incurred great expense and sacrifice. Our naval, civil, and Army expense on account of the Philippines last year could not have been less than $100,000,000. This vast expense will continue so long as the present policy is pursued. The estimated expense for next year and the succeeding year show no reduction. As a business proposition the Philippine venture has proven itself to be a great loss and failure. The chances for profit and trade in the future are small and remote. General MacArthur, in his report, candidly confesses that those who expect much profit from the islands are doomed to disappointment. By this bill the United States receives no trade advantages over other She incurs all the great expense of pacifying, governing, and administering the islands, while others, who incur no expense, receive nearly all the profits in trade and commerce. We are expending vast sums of money in the Philippines for which we have received no returns, and will never receive any.

If we are to continue to hold the islands we certainly should not persist in maintaining the present trade arrangements which have brought to us no profits and very little business or commerce. If we are to bear the burden of governing the Philippines we should certainly have some compensating benefits. It is claimed that our retention of the Philippines will increase our prestige and power in the East. This is not true. Our present position in the Philippines is a source of weakness, not of strength. It keeps there continually a large army necessary to hold these people in subjection. The army employed in these islands could not be used outside in case we had serious difficulties elsewhere. Under such conditions, instead of decreasing the army in the Philippines we would be compelled to augment it in order to hold down insurrections that would certainly arise

The Philippines as at present held are sources of military weakness, not strength. The amount of money that we are expending there, if used in building and maintaining a navy, would furnish us a navy superior to any in the world. This amount of money, us a navy superior to any in the world. This amount of money, if appropriated for that purpose, would establish and maintain our naval supremacy. Naval supremacy would make us the dominating and controlling power of the world. The amount of money wasted in the Philippines, if diverted to a navy, would easily make us the first power in the world. Our interests, commerce, and trade could then be easily protected by ourselves, and would be dependent upon the good will of no nation, nor could they be jeopardized by national conspiracies or combinations. I would be delighted to see these wasteful expenditures in the Philippines cease and the money used for the upbuilding of the American Navy second to none in the world.

The time has come for this Philippine folly to be abandoned.

The time has come for this Philippine folly to be abandoned. We should declare that our intentions are to give to these people we should declare that our intentions are to give to these people freedom and independence as soon as they are capable of establishing a safe and stable government. This declaration will pacify the islands and make of all of their inhabitants our warm and loyal friends. We should also let it be understood that pending this we will permit no outside interference or aggression. We should obtain for ourselves suitable coaling stations and trade advantages. By pursuing this course the Philippine Islands will become to us a source of profit, and our relations with them will be of mutual advantage and benefit. By this we will make of them warm and valuable friends, who would be useful to us in any wars or troubles that might overtake us in the Orient. This is the policy which both justice and prudence demand that we should pursue in the settlement of this vexed question. [Applause.]

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Wachter, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 76. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1901, on the 18th day of said month.

REVENUE FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. Grosvenor was recognized.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Ohio will allow me—we have only used forty-five minutes and the other side has used an hour. If he will permit, the gentleman from Massachusetts will now occupy fifteen minutes. Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have yielded ten minutes to the gentleman, and the gentleman from New York [Mr.McClellan], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, has yielded him five minutes, so that he will have fifteen minutes.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, the war with Spain was undertaken for the express purpose of enabling Cuba to establish her independence and with the solemn assertion that it was not to be a war of conquest or subjugation. Victory crowned our efforts, and thus far the pledge has been faithfully kept so far as Cuba is concerned. In the terms of peace agreed upon incidental to that war and directly growing out of it, Spain undertook to cede to us whatever of sovereignty she had over the Philippine Islands.

The inhabitants of these islands had for a longer time than Cuba been struggling to throw off the yoke of Spain and set up an independent government for themselves. When we made attack upon the Spanish fleet in Manila Harbor and the Spanish soldiers in Manila, the Filipinos joined us in the common cause. If the Filipinos were not at that time promised by us their independence when Spain should be overcome, yet, having proffered their services in our aid, and in view of the history and traditions of our country, every page of which is dedicated to the principle that liberty and independence are not only God-given rights to us, but to all nations who seek them, and by all the rules of comity and good faith, they had a perfect right to believe, and did believe, that they too would achieve their independence and that the United States would be the last power on earth to refuse it to them. Suffice it at this time to say that we not only refused their request, but have for two years made war and waste upon those islands and their inhabitants in an attempt to reduce them to submission to our will and control and to deprive them of their natural right to the same liberty we demanded, and by insurrection and revolution finally acquired, from Britain.

What a spectacle we have presented to the less favored and despotic nations of the world! We have overpowered the organized resistance of these people by the supreme force of arms and the science of war, but we have not conquered them. The same spirit is there; the same desire for liberty and independence animates and controls them now that did when the first shot was fired. They are simply biding their time and waiting for an opportunity to realize their much-cherished purpose. They have been told, officially and unofficially, that we are interested for their present and future welfare; that our ways, like those of the Lord, are to them past finding out, but that in the end everything we do will inure to their uplifting and eternal good; that we are anxious to grant to them so much of liberty and independence as is good for them and as they are capable of receiving and appreciating, but reserving always to ourselves the right to decide as to the amount, the quality, and the time when it shall be bestowed.

And so as an earnest of some of the good things we have in store for them, and to display our kindness and love, we assure them that they are, in the language of the much-heralded orator from Indiana, "ours and ours forever," but not of us, as we are painfully reminded by the divided opinion of the Supreme Court, and so just for the sake of discipline we propose not to permit them to trade with us except they pay tribute, and we demand the payment of the same tax we insist shall be paid by the least favored nations of the world who trade with us. They are of us to tax, but not of us to receive anything but discipline and promises. They are to be taxed if they sell anything to us and they are to be taxed if they buy anything of us. We tax them a-coming and a-going and at each end of the route. This is one way we demonstrate our unselfishness and that we are exerting every effort for their good that they may expand their trade and commerce, increase their products, and grow rich and happy under the benign influence of their unselfish and sainted mother-in-law. Some of our latter-day statesmen express surprise and astonishment that the Filipinos do not seem to appreciate our kindness and the great benefits we are bestowing upon these unfortunate people, and are annoyed that they do not comprehend how much better off they are than they were before we began to shoot our policy into them and through them.

In defense of this unrighteous and unjust policy which is sought to be forced upon the Filipinos against their consent and protest, it is said in way of excuse and in mitigation that it is absolutely essential for us to have the Philippine Islands to expand our trade, extend our commerce, and find a new market for our products. Let us see how we are likely to be affected in our trade relations with the Filipinos and to what extent a new market is to be found there for our manufactures and agricultural products. Whatever our policy toward or relations with the Filipinos may be will not affect our trade relations with any other country in the East one whit for the better or the worse. The total value of all merchandise imported into the Philippine Islands for the fiscal year 1901 was $30,279,406, and the total value exported was $23,214,948. The value of imports from the United States was $2,855,685, while the value of exports of merchandise to the United States was $2,572,021. The value of imports from the United Kingdom was $6,956,145, and the value of exports to the United Kingdom was $10,704,741.

The exports and imports to and from the United Kingdom being two and one-half times greater than the exports and imports were with us; but in each case it will be seen that the Philippine Islands sold more than they bought—to the United Kingdom about one and one-half times more and to the United States in about the same proportion—showing that the Filipinos sell a great deal more than they buy. How fast shall we get rich in our trade with a country from which we buy one and one-half times as much as we sell?

It is interesting to go a step further in considering the trade relations and this new-found market and see what the merchandise was which was exported to the islands. I have not the figures at hand for the fiscal year 1901, but I have them for the year 1900, and while they are probably a little less, they are sufficiently near for all practical purposes.

1900, and while they are probably a little less, they are sufficiently near for all practical purposes.

The total valuation of whisky, wine, and beer, inclusive of the bottles containing the same, was $1,102,604, or about one-half in value of all the exports of the United States. The total duty on merchandise imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States amounted to $623,446, of which sum $321,826—more than half—was received from whisky and beer

States amounted to $623,446, of which sum $321,826—more than half—was received from whisky and beer.

The balance of trade is on the wrong side from a commercial point of view, and the balance of trade must of necessity continue to be against us. The Filipinos require but little clothing, and that, too, of the cheapest kind. Their food for the most part they can raise many times more cheaply than we can and pay cost of shipment. Luxuries are enjoyed but by comparatively few. Most of the things they require they can raise and do raise, and so with cheap labor, cheaper than slave labor, they are prepared to sell more than they will buy.

Considering the Philippine question from a commercial point of view, from the low and sordid standard of the dollar and the cent, let us see how much we are making or will make by reason of our recently acquired possessions. For two years we have had about 60,000 soldiers in the Philippines. The average cost for men and officers, transportation and all, is $1,200 each, or about $72,000,000. The total value of our exports, as before shown, is only $2,855,685 and our imports $2,572,021—a total of exports and imports of $5,427,706. If the merchandise did not cost anything, but was found or given us, we should then be out of pocket $66,572,294. But, says one, this expense for the Army and Navy will close when we withdraw our troops. That may be; but tell us when that blessed day will come, tell us approximately, and you will gladden the hearts of $0,000,000 people, not to include the 10,000,000 of our republican-made fellow-citizens 7,000 miles away in the Philippines.

The friends and promoters of our Philippine policy declare it to be our avowed purpose to instruct, educate, and enlighten these people, so they will be cabable of liberty and self-government, and then bestow upon them so much as they are capable of accepting and enjoying. Let us see how we are proceeding along these lines. We are introducing ourselves to our new-found brothers with the Bible in one hand and demijohn in the other, the latter somewhat extended, and granting them the liberty—and it is about all the liberty we do grant them—of making their own selection, and as a result we are told that there are in Manila to-day five times as many licensed and unlicensed grogeries as there were before we took possession of the islands and began, as we claim, to prepare them for self-government and citizenship. About how long will it take to get them properly fitted for self-government if we continue to send over there more in value of runn and heer than all other things combined?

It should be noticed that we hold out an inducement for the Filipinos to import and buy our whisky that we withhold from our citizens in the States. The customs tariff for the Philippine Islands imposed by the Philippine Commission, and which this bill reenacts, provides for a tariff on whisky imported into the islands of 35 cents a liter, and a liter is about equal to our quart. The people in the United States are compelled to pay a duty of $2.50 per gallon, or 62 cents per quart—nearly twice as great as that imposed in the Philippines—while the tariff on beer ranges only from 13 to 18 cents per gallon in the Philippines, while here it ranges from 20 to 40 cents per gallon, or, in other words, the tariff is only about one-half of what it is here. No wonder that most of our brewers and distillers are expansionists and imperialists.

Mr. Chairman, it is well known that there is to-day an urgent demand throughout the country for a reform and reduction of the excessively high duties imposed by the Dingley tariff act. If we would increase our trade with foreign countries we must be willing to trade—not simply sell. Commerce is the exchange of products, and how can the foreigner sell to us if the duties are so exorbitant as to be in effect prohibition? Demand is being made by those who have hitherto been strong believers in and advocates of high protection that the present tariff bill should be radically reformed and changed. They appreciate the fact that conditions have materially changed since that bill was passed. that one require much argument to convince a thinking man that when our steam engines, iron rails, and woolen goods, and other products of our people here at home are sold in Russia, Germany, and England at a less price than they are sold in our Germany, and England at a less price than they are sold in our own market, something is wrong which should be righted, and if the Republican party, through pride of opinion in the infallibility of the provisions of the Dingley tariff act, refuses to reform and modify it to meet present conditions and necessities, the people will delegate the power to another party which will.

And although I am a protectionist, yet, believing as I do that the provisions of this tariff bill are not adapted to the present the provisions of this tariff bill are not adapted to the present needs and requirements of the business interests, private and corporate, and that it should be very essentially and speedily changed and modified, I can not vote to force its present unwise provisions upon our colonial subjects in the Philippine Islands. If I am powerless to help these people I can refrain from harming them. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, imposing a discriminating tariff against the Philippines, is based upon the same principle and is subject to the same legal and constitu-

the same principle and is subject to the same legal and constitutional considerations as was the Porto Rican legislation, some-times known as the Foraker Act. For that reason among others I do not feel justified in supporting it.

I wish here to enter a protest against the designation which is usually given to this Porto Rican legislation. Many call it the Foraker Act. The only reason that can be given therefor is the fact that in the Senate Senator Foraker introduced an amendment to the House bill, which was adopted. But the bill was a bill for raising revenue and originated where such a bill could only originate-in this House. It was introduced by the gentleonly originate—in this House. It was introduced by the gentle-man from New York [Mr. PAYNE], referred to the Ways and Means Committee, of which he was the chairman, and reported back to the House by him. In accordance with all precedents, it should be known as the "Payne Act." There are those, by the way, who manifest their full knowledge of the details by calling it the "Foreacre Act."

I am well aware that the Porto Rican act has been sustained in its tariff features as constitutional by a bare majority of one by the Supreme Court of the United States in at least two cases. While I abide by the decisions of the court in those cases, and if the judgments were such as to require an appropriation of public money for their payment I should not hesitate to support the judgment by voting for such an appropriation, I do not understand that the opinions of the court in these cases compel me upon my responsibility as a Representative to vote for what I believe to be an unconstitutional measure, especially so in view of the manner in which the results were reached, the incongruity of the results, and the variety of the inconsistent views expressed by the different members of the majority of the court, for these facts render it at least possible, if not probable, that upon reargument and a more mature and exhaustive consideration of the same question a different result might be reached.

In the particulars above referred to I believe the cases to be without a parallel in our judicial history. I challenge the production of a case where the opinions of the court are so vulnerable, so open to fair criticism, so illy capable of withstanding a searching analysis. It is my purpose to discuss these cases at some length, as I deem them by far more important, involving more transcendent consequences, than any others that the highest tribunal known to our law has ever had the responsibility of determining.

I believe such discussion to be not only the privilege of every American citizen, but, in so far as it may contribute to a more intelligent apprehension of the true constitutional situation, the discharge of a public duty.

I may here make a distinction between criticism of the opinions of a court and criticism of the members of the court giving the opinions. Whether under a system like ours, where every man who has the responsibility of discharging public duties—and a judge in rendering an opinion discharges a public duty—stands, and ought to be able to stand, in the full and searching sunlight of publicity, the members of the court in this instance can be properly criticised for the opinions which they have given is a question that I have no occasion to discuss, as I have not so criticised and do not propose so to criticise.

I shall deal wholly with their opinions and the reasoning and facts by which they are sought to be sustained. It may and ought to be assumed that every member of the court, in these great cases, exercised an honest, independent, and patriotic judgment; that each learned, able, and distinguished judge reached the conclusion to which he was impelled by his convictions as to what the law was. No intelligent man can pretend that there is no room for an honest difference of opinion when these great fundamental questions are for the first time being determined.

While I do not agree with the majority of the court, I do not understand that a full and frank statement of my views and an analysis of theirs tend in any way to impeach their integrity or reflect upon their character. It may be interesting to the curious to note, however, that there have been those who do not appear to have been scrupulous about observing the distinction between the court as individuals and the opinions of the court. Among them may be found some of our greatest statesmen of a former generation. They are men, too, whose names are still honored generation. They are men, too, whose names are still honored and revered by their admiring countrymen; men whose fame will be cherished as a precious heritage when many of us now "drest in a little brief authority" shall have reached the condition when "neither shall his place know him any more."

In 1858 William Pitt Fessenden, in referring to the Dred Scott decision, said in the United States Senate:

"Sir, I was perfectly aware, from the course of proceeding, hat this decision would be. When I saw the dictum, or the what this decision would be. dogma, if you please to call it so, laid down in the Cincinnati platform, that there was no power in the people of a Territory to exclude slavery, and when I saw that the question had been brought to the Supreme Court of the United States and that the Supreme Court, after hearing the argument, had adjourned from one day before the election of President over to another day after the election of President, I knew what the strength of the slavery party was, and I felt what the decision was to be; and I felt, as well, and I do not hesitate to say it here, that had the result of that election been otherwise, and had not the party triumphed on the dogma which they had thus introduced, we should never have heard of a doctrine so utterly at variance with all truth, so utterly destitute of all legal logic, so founded on error and un-supported by anything like argument, as is the opinion of the Supreme Court.

"* * * , and I tell you that I believe any tolerably respecta-ble lawyer in the United States can show, beyond all question, to any fair and unprejudiced mind that the decision has nothing to stand upon except assumption, and bad logic from the assumptions made.

"Then, sir, to sum up the substance of my argument, I wish to say again that what I consider this original scheme to have been was to assert popular sovereignty in the first place, with a view of rendering the repeal of the Missouri compromise in some way palatable; then to deny it and avow the establishment of slavery; then to legalize this by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and claim that it had become established. I sincerely believe that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was a part of the programme. It was to be had, if having it would avail; but if not, it would never have been had." (Speech in United States Senate, February 8, 1858.)

Charles Sumner, referring to the same case, said in speeches in the United States Senate:

"Referring to Dred Scott, I am against the decision of the Supreme Court. * * * I am not one whit behind him in con-demnation of that judgment which must forever stand forth among the inhumanities of this generation. * preme Court has erred infinitely and wretchedly." The Su-

"I enter a standing protest against that atrocious judgment, which was false in law, and also false in the history with which it sought to maintain its false law."

William H. Seward said, referring to the Supreme Court: "And they and the Preident alike forgot that judicial usurpation is more odious and intolerable than any other among the manifold practices of tyranny.'

Abraham Lincoln, in his Galesburg speech, gave his idea as to what inspired the Dred Scott decision, saying:

"This is but an opinion, and the opinion of one very humble man; but it is my opinion that the Dred Scott decision, as it is, never would have been made in its present form if the party that made it had not been sustained previously by the elections. My own opinion is that the new Dred Scott decision, deciding against the right of the people of the States to exclude slavery, will never be made if that party is not sustained by the elections. I believe, further, that it is just as sure to be made as to-morrow is to come if that party is to be sustained."

The right and duty of the legislative branch of the Government to maintain its own view of the Constitution in voting upon measures before it untrammeled, and uncontrolled by the opinions of the coordinate judicial branch, has been asserted and vigor-ously maintained. Webster, in his speech savagely attacking Jackson for his bank-veto message, conceded and asserted it, saying:

"It is true that each branch of the legislature has an undoubted right in the exercise of its functions to consider the constitutionality of a law proposed to be passed. This is naturally a part of its duty, and neither branch can be compelled to pass any law, or do any other act, which it deems to be beyond the reach of its constitutional power."

Sumner laid it down in one of his speeches already quoted from,

when he said:
"The Senator from Maryland invoked the Dred Scott decision as a reason why Congress should not recognize colored persons as citizens. In reply, I simply asserted the right of Congress to interpret the Constitution without constraint from the Supreme Court, and this I now repeat. Each branch of the Government must interpret the Constitution for itself, according to its own sense of obligation, under the oath we have all taken. And God forbid that Congress should expect to work the strait is also forbid that Congress should consent to wear the strait-jacket of the Dred Scott case!"

Bluff old Ben Wade, in a speech in the Senate, made the following emphatic declaration:

"I deny the doctrine—the most dangerous that could be admitted in a free country—that these judges, holding their offices for life, reposing with total immunity, have any right to decide the law of the land for any department of the Government. Sir, you would have the most concentrated, irresponsible despotism on God's earth if you give such an interpretation to the decisions of that or any other court. No, sir; each department must act for itself. I stand here clothed with the same power to proclaim what is the Constitution upon the passage of any law that comes before us as that or any other court. I follow my own interpretation of the Constitution. I am bound to do it. I have sworn that I would, and I beg of the Senate never to yield to this arbitrary doctrine that the Supreme Court can bind the other departments of this Government, that we must yield to the decisions that they make. No, sir; never. They may decide on the poor man's rights, who is so unfortunate as to fall within their grasp.

* * Dred Scott's rights have been determined, and determined. * * * Dred Scott's rights have been determined, and determined forever; but no other department of this Government, no other right, was touched. * * * I pity the weakness of the man who yields to any such ideas as that. That court has no such transcendent power. It could bind nobody but the suitors in the court. It would be unfortunate if it could." (Senate, March 13-15 1858.)

Abraham Lincoln repeatedly asserted it, especially in the Lincoln-Douglas debates. In his Chicago speech he said:

"A little now on the other point—the Dred Scott decision. Another of the issues, he says, that is to be made with me is upon his devotion to the Dred Scott decision and my opposition to it.

"I have expressed heretofore, and I now repeat, my opposition his devotion to the Dred Scott decision and my opposition to it.

"I have expressed heretofore, and I now repeat, my opposition to the Dred Scott decision; but I should be allowed to state the nature of that opposition, and I ask your indulgence while I do so. What is fairly implied by the term Judge Douglas has used,

'resistance to the decision?' I do not resist it. If I wanted to take Dred Scott from his master I would be interfering with property, and that terrible difficulty that Judge Douglas speaks of—of interfering with property—would arise. But I am doing no such thing as that, but all that I am doing is refusing to obey it as a political rule. If I were in Congress, and a vote should come up political rule. If I were in Congress, and a vote should come up on a question whether slavery should be prohibited in a new Territory, in spite of the Dred Scott decision I would vote that it should.

"That is what I should do. Judge Douglas said last night that before the decision he might advance his opinion, and it might be contrary to the decision when it was made; but after it might be contrary to the decision when it was made; but after it was made he would abide by it until it was reversed. Just so! We let this property abide by the decision, but we will try to reverse that decision. We will try to put it where Judge Douglas would not object, for he says he will obey it until it is reversed. Somebody has to reverse that decision, since it is made, and we mean to reverse it, and we mean to do it peaceably.

"What are the uses of decisions of courts? They have two uses. As rules of property they have two uses. First, they decide upon questions before the court. They decide in this case that Dred Scott is a slave. Nobody resists that. Not only that, but they say to everybody else that persons standing just as Dred Scott stands is as he is. That is, they say that when a question comes up upon another person it will be so decided again, unless the court decided in another way—unless the court overrules its decision. Well, we mean to do what we can to have the court decide the other way. That is one thing we mean to try to do." In a speech at Springfield he said:

"I am opposed to that decision in a certain sense, but not in the sense in which he puts it. I say that in so far as it decided in sense in which he puts it. I say that in so far as it decided in favor of Dred Scott's master and against Dred Scott and his family I do not propose to disturb or resist the decision.

"I have never proposed to do any such thing. I think that in respect for judicial authority my humble history would not suffer in comparison with that of Judge Douglas. He would have the citizen conform his vote to that decision; the member of Congress, his; the President, his use of the veto power. He would make it a rule of political action for the people and all the departments of the Government. I would not. By resisting it as a political rule I disturb no right of property, create no disorder, excite no mobs."

In the Galesburg speech:

"I have turned his attention to the fact that General Jackson differed with him in regard to the political obligation of a Supreme Court decision. I have asked his attention to the fact that Jefferson differed with him in regard to the political obligation of a Supreme Court decision. Jefferson said that 'judges are as honest as other men, and not more so.' And he said, substantially, that 'whenever a free people should give up in absolute whenever the said and the said of th submission to any department of government, retaining for them-

In his opinion it was not only not binding upon members of

In his opinion it was not only not binding upon members of Congress, but he proposed every legitimate method of resistance in order to obtain its reversal. At Quincy he said:

"We oppose the Dred Scott decision in a certain way, upon which I ought perhaps to address you a few words. We do not propose that when Dred Scott has been decided to be a slave by the court, we, as a mob, will decide him to be free. We do not propose that when any other one, or one thousand, shall be decided by that court to be slaves we will in any violent way disturb the rights of property thus settled, but we nevertheless do oppose that decision as a political rule which shall be binding on the voter to vote for nobody who thinks it wrong, which shall be binding on the members of Congress or the President to favor no measure that does not actually concur with the principles of that decision. We do not propose to be bound by it as a political rule in that way, because we think it lays the foundation not merely of enlarging and spreading out what we consider an evil, but it of enlarging and spreading out what we consider an evil, but it lays the foundation for spreading that evil into the States themselves. We propose so resisting it as to have it reversed if we can and a new judicial rule established upon this subject."

* * * "And I will tell you here that General Jackson once said each man was bound to support the Constitution 'as he understands it.' Now, Judge Douglas understands the Constitution according to the Dred Scott decision, and he is bound to support it as he understands it. I understand it another way, and therefore I am bound to support it in the way in which I understand it."

And at Alton:

* * * "I do not believe it is a constitutional right to hold slaves in a Territory of the United States. I believe the decision was improperly made, and I go for reversing it. Judge Douglas is furious against those who go for reversing a decision."

There can be no higher authority. No man more truly loved his country or was more jealous of the integrity of her institutions than he who endured martyrdom for her sake.

I am prepared to give the House the reasons why I do not look upon these decisions as final or conclusive. I ask its attention to a discussion of the opinions on which they rest.

THE INSULAR CASES.

I shall use in this discussion, so far as applicable, an address which I delivered upon these cases before the American Bar Association at Denver in August last.

A statement of the cases is essential to show what was actually decided. The cases were: De Lima vs. Bidwell (182 U. S., 1), Downes vs. Bidwell (182 U. S., 244), Huus vs. New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company (182 U. S. 392), Goetze vs. United States (182 U. S. 221), Crossman vs. United States (182 U. S.—), and Armstrong vs. United States (182 U. S. 243).

These cases were all decided on May 27, 1901.

In De Lima vs. Bidwell the question was whether, after the cession of Porto Rico to the United States by the treaty of Paris, it remained a foreign country within the meaning of the tariff laws, remained a foreign country within the meaning of the tariff laws, the action being brought to recover duties collected prior to the passage of the Foraker Act, under the Dingley Act, which provided that "there shall be levied and collected and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries," etc., certain duties therein specified. The court held "that at the time these duties were levied Porto Rico was not a foreign country within the meaning of the tariff laws, but a territory of the United States, that the duties were illegally exacted, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover them back." entitled to recover them back."

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court, and with him concurred Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, Mr. Justice Harlan, Mr. Justice Brewer, and Mr. Justice Peckham. Mr. Justice McKenna dissented and drew an opinion in which Mr. Justice Shiras and Mr. Justice White concurred, and Mr. Justice Gray dissented in a short note. Downes vs. Bidwell was an action to recover duties collected under the Foraker Act upon "merchandise coming into the United States from Porto Rico," to use the peculiar and somewhat ungainly language of that act. It involved the constitu-tionality of that part of the act, and five members of the court concurred in a judgment holding that part of the act constitu-tional. Mr. Justice Brown announced the conclusion and judg-ment of the court, affirming the judgment of the court below. He did not pronounce its opinion, but rendered one of his own. Mr. Justice White, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Shiras and Mr. Justice McKenna, rendered an opinion uniting in the judg-Mr. Justice McKenna, rendered an opinion uniting in the judgment of affirmance. Referring to Mr. Justice Brown's opinion, he stated that the reasons which caused him to concur in the result "are different from, if not in conflict with, those expressed in that opinion, if its meaning is by me not misconceived." Mr. Justice Gray concurred in substance with the opinion of Mr. Justice White, but summed up so as to "indicate" his "position in other cases now standing for judgment."

Technically speaking, there is no opinion of the court to sustain the judgment. Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Harlan, Mr. Justice Brewer, and Mr. Justice Peckham, delivered a dissenting opinion, and Mr. Justice Harlan delivered a dissenting opinion giving some additional considera-tions. Dooley vs. United States was a suit to recover duties collected upon goods exported from New York to Porto Rico, partly before and partly after the ratifications of the treaty, but in every instance prior to the passage of the Foraker Act. As to the duties instance prior to the passage of the Foraker Act. As to the duties collected prior to the ratifications of the treaty the court were unanimous in holding that they were legally exacted "under the war power."

The same justices who concurred in the De Lima case concurred in this as to the duties collected after ratifications. Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court, holding that the "authority of the President as Commander in Chief to exact duties upon imports from the United States ceased with the ratification of the treaty of peace, and her right to the free entry of goods from the ports of the United States continued until Congress should constitutionally legislate upon the subject." The justices who dissented in the De Lima case dissented in this. Mr. Justice White delivered the dissenting opinion. Huus vs. New York and Poots Pice Steemship Compagna raised the question as to whether White delivered the dissenting opinion. Huus vs. New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company raised the question as to whether trade between the United States and Porto Rico was, after the passage of the Foraker Act, "coasting trade," and the court were unanimous in holding that it was. Goetze vs. United States and Crossman vs. United States involved the questions determined in the De Lima case, and were controlled by that case. Armstrong vs. United States was controlled by the Dooley case. Two cases argued at the same term were held for advisement and decided December 2, 1901: Fourteen Diamond Rings vs. United States, rings brought from the Philippines into the United States after the ratifications of the treaty of peace, without the payment of duty, and seized for nonpayment, and Dooley vs. payment of duty, and seized for nonpayment, and Dooley vs. United States, raising the validity of duties collected upon goods "coming into Porto Rico from the United States" after the passage of the Foraker Act.

THE DOWNES CASE.

The Downes case is the only one that passes upon questions that apply to permanent conditions or that attempts to furnish a foundation for a permanent Government policy. All that is deroundation for a permanent Government policy. All that is decided by that case is that as to "merchandise coming into the United States from Porto Rico" Congress is not restrained by the Constitution in imposing a discriminating tariff against Porto Rico. In other words, as to imports from Porto Rico Congress can constitutionally discriminate. It may be said that the case involves other absolute powers, but that is as far as the case itself goes. Whether all the other constitutional restrictions apply, and if not, which apply, remains to be determined. Four of the majority (and I include Mr. Justice Gray, as he says that in "substance" he agrees with the opinion of Mr. Justice White) are evidently appalled by the enormity of the argument that would deprive Porto Rico of all the constitutional guaranties as to civil rights. They repeatedly so declare in the opinion of Mr. Justice White, as though fearful that it might be inferred that they entertain that view, as appears from the following excerpts:

"Hence it is that wherever a power is given by the Constitution, and there is a limitation imposed on the authority, such restriction operates upon and confines every action on the subject within its constitutional limits."

"As Congress, in governing the Territories, is subject to the Constitution, it results that all the limitations of the Constitution which are applicable to Congress in exercising this authority necessarily limit its power on this subject. It follows, also, that every provision of the Constitution which is applicable to the Territories is also controlling therein." * * *

"From these conceded propositions it follows that Congress in legislating for Porto Rico was only empowered to act within the Constitution and subject to its applicable limitations and that every provision of the Constitution which applied to a country situated as was that island was potential in Porto Rico."

"Undoubtedly there are general prohibitions in the Constitu-tion in favor of the liberty and property of the citizens, which are not mere regulations as to the form and manner in which a conceded power may be exercised, but which are an absolute denial of all authority under any circumstances or conditions to do particular acts. In the nature of things, limitations of this character can not be under any circumstances transcended, because of the complete absence of power. * * * "The doctrine that those absolute withdrawals of power which the Constitution has made in favor of human liberty are applicable to every condition or status has been clearly pointed out by

"There is in reason, then, no room in this case to contend that Congress can destroy the liberties of the people of Porto Rico by exercising in their regard powers against freedom and justice, which the Constitution has absolutely denied. * * *

"The fact that the act directs the officers to swear to support the Constitution does not militate against this view, for, as I have conceded, whether the island be incorporated or not, the applicable provisions of the Constitution are there in force.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Justice White, with his keen appreciation of the sacredness of constitutional rights, in order to susciation of the sacredness of constitutional rights, in order to sustain his conclusions in this case was obliged to use a train of reasoning that manifestly kept pressing upon him the idea of despotic power, and thus required this continual negation. It quired him to "protest too much." Nevertheless, just what will be held "applicable provisions" we do not know, but as the four dissenting justices hold that the Constitution now applies to Porto Rico to that extent, we can feel confident that at least as to applicable provisions eight justices will concur. Mr. Justice Brown is not as sensitive as his brethren, who agree with him as to what in the Downes case, but disagree as to how. He comes the nearest to the contention of the Government, citing with approval:

"Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments, but those limitations would exist rather by inference and the general spirit of the Constitution, from which Congress derives all its powers, than by any express and direct application of its provisions." He says:

"To sustain the judgment in the case under consideration, it by no means becomes necessary to show that none of the articles of the Constitution apply to the island of Porto Rico. There is a clear distinction between such prohibitions as go to the very root of the power of Congress to act at all, irrespective of time or place, and such as are operative only 'throughout the United States' or among the several States."

He proposes to be cautious:

"We do not wish, however to be understood as expressing an opinion how far the bill on ghts contained in the first eight amendments is of general and how far of local application."

Again:
"There are certain principles of natural justice inherent in the Anglo-Saxon character, which need no expression in constitutions or statutes to give them effect or to secure dependencies against legislation manifestly hostile to their real interests." * * * "We suggest, without intending to decide, that there may be a distinction between certain natural rights enforced in the Constitution by prohibitions against interference with them, and what may be termed artificial or remedial rights which are peculiar to our own system of jurisprudence." * * * "It does not follow that in the meantime, awaiting that decision, the people are in the matter of personal rights unprotected by the provisions of our Constitution and subject to the merely arbitrary control of Congress."

"We do not desire, however, to anticipate the difficulties which would naturally arise in this connection, but merely to disclaim any intention to hold that the inhabitants of these territories are subject to an unrestrained power on the part of Congress to deal with them upon the theory that they have no rights which it is bound to respect."

He has certainly left the door sufficiently open. Just how "certain principles of natural justice" could be used in court to invalidate an act of Congress, unrestrained by any constitutional provision, we are not informed. The inconsistency on the part of Mr. Justice Brown in the De Lima and Downes cases is obvious and tends to impair our confidence in his conclusions. On the other hand, the consistency of the dissenting justices in the Downes case and the manner in which their reasoning, without distortion, answers the various conditions tend to establish its correctness. It is true that magazine and newspaper editors, who feel bound to sustain the conclusions, say, to quote one of them: "They appear to us entirely consistent with each other and entirely clear in themselves." This is not an assertion that they are "consistent," but that "they appear to us." On this point I will assume that the court knows at least as much as anyone else, and let it speak for itself.

Mr. Justice Gray, in his note in the De Lima case, dissents because. "It appears to me irreconcilable * * * with the opinions of the majority of the justices in the case, this day decided, of Downes vs. Bidwell." Mr. Justice White, in his dissenting opinion in the Dooley case, in which Mr. Justice Gray, Mr. Justice Shiras, and Mr. Justice McKenna concurred, stated the inconsistency thus:

"Now, this court has just decided in Downes v. Bidwell that, despite the treaty of cession, Porto Rico remained in a position where Congress could impose a tariff duty on goods coming from that island into the United States. If, however, it remained in that position, how then can it be now declared that it ceased to be in that relation because it was no longer foreign country within the meaning of the tariff laws?

The fact that somebody does not see the inconsistency makes it none the less obvious. The inconsistency of itself does not tend to demonstrate which conclusion was wrong, and is only material as tending to detract from the weight to be given to the reasoning generally. Is the conclusion in the Downes case sustained by such reason and authority as to justify us in assuming that it is the deliberate and final judgment of the court upon this great question; that it has laid down the rule which will govern the Republic for all time, so that although new territory may be acquired, the Republic will not expand, but will simply accumulate It seems to me more than doubtful.

Mr. Justice Brown holds that under the provision of the Constitution which declares that "all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," the term "United States" is confined to the several States, and that the Territories and the District of Columbia are not "States" and not included therein, and therefore Porto Rico, being a Territory, is not pro-

HEPBURN VS. ELLZEY.

The earliest case upon which he relies is Hepburn vs. Ellzey, 2 Cranch, 445, where it was held that under the clause of the Constitution limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States to controversies between citizens of the different States, a citizen of the District of Columbia could not maintain an action the circuit court of the United States. It is true that Mr. Chief Justice Marshall there said:

"It becomes necessary to inquire whether Columbia is a State in the sense of that instrument. The result of that examination is a conviction that the members of the American confederacy only are the States contemplated in the Constitution."

It is also true that Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, recognizing the distinction between the term "State," as used in that provision, and the "United States," said in speaking of the same man that and the "United States," said in speaking of the same man that he had just held was not a citizen of a "State:"

"It is true that as citizens of the United States, and of that particular district which is subject to the jurisdiction of Congress, it is extraordinary that the courts of the United States, which are open to aliens and to the citizens of every State in the Union, should be closed upon them. But this is a subject for legislative, not for judicial consideration."

It seems that Marshall could see how a man could be within the "United States" and not be in a "State." It will be observed that the learned justice does not quote this remark.

An examination of the Downes case requires the consideration of at least four great leading cases: Loughborough vs. Blake, 5 Wheat., 317, 1820; Insurance Co. vs. Canter, 1 Pet., 511, 1828; Cross vs. Harrison, 16 How., 164, 1853; and Dred Scott vs. Sanford, 19 How., 393, 1856.

In the first three cases the court were unanimous, and in the last case as to the proposition here involved there was no dissent, and as to that proposition the authority of these cases prior to the Downes case had never been denied or questioned. One is directly and two are practically overruled by a disagreeing majority of one.

LOUGHBOROUGH VS. BLAKE. Loughborough vs. Blake is directly in point. The provision of the Constitution in question was considered by the court, and Mr. Chief Justice Marshall delivered the unanimous opinion in which he said:

"The power, then, to lay and collect duties, imposts, and excises, may be exercised and must be exercised throughout the United States. Does this term designate the whole or any particular portion of the American empire? Certainly this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The Dis-trict of Columbia, or the territory west of the Missouri, is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania; and it is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imposts, duties, and excises should be observed in the one than in the other."

Mr. Justice Brown says these are "certain observations which have occasioned some embarrassment in other cases," but I submit in none so great as in the Downes case. The extraordinary ingenuity manifested in this case by the earnest effort to escape from that authority constitutes one of its most striking features. The learned Attorney-General examined the original files, and found that it was uncertain whether the suit related to "one black gelding about 9 years old" or "to 10 cows and 10 oxen," and, therefore, it was "scarcely more than a moot case." Upon an analysis of the case he found that "the point argued in the case was whether the District of Columbia could be taxed, seeing the case was whether the District of Columbia could be taxed, seeing the case was whether the District of Columbia could be taxed, seeing the case was whether the District of Columbia could be taxed, seeing the case was whether the case was whether the District of Columbia could be taxed, seeing the case was whether the case was whether the District of Columbia could be taxed, seeing the case was whether th ing that it had no Representative in Congress. That was the question argued, and that is what was decided." Although these arguments were presented with all of his accustomed vigor and ability, he does not appear to have succeeded in convincing anybody but himself, as these contentions were not even alluded to by any justice. Mr. Justice Brown is entitled to the credit of introducing in an opinion for the first time a new method of disposing of that case. I do not say he discovered it, for it is true that there were statesmen who, in groping about for a way of escape from Marshall's logic, had blazed out this path. He admits that the conclusion is correct, "so far at least as it applies to the District of Columbia." He can not quite get up to denying the

"This District had been a part of the States of Maryland and Virginia. It had been subject to the Constitution, and was a part of the United States. The Constitution had attached to it irrev-There are steps which can never be taken backward. The tie that bound the States of Maryland and Virginia to the Constitution could not be dissolved, without at least the consent of the Federal and State governments to a formal separation. The mere cession of the District of Columbia to the Federal Government relinquished the authority of the States, but it did not take it out of the United States or from under the ægis of the Consti-

tion."
This reasoning is inconsistent with the theory upon which the third reasoning is inconsistent with the theory upon which the "United States" is composed. This reasoning is inconsistent with the theory upon which the whole case is based, i. e., that the "United States" is composed only of "States." We have here a part of the "United States" which is not a State. Therefore it is quite possible for the term "United States" to include territory outside of the States. "Neither party," he says, "had ever consented to that construction of the cession." Inasmuch as the question was never even dreamed of until invoked by the eximption of the construction of the dreamed of until invoked by the exigencies of this case, it is quite evident that it was not an element of "the cession."

Again, "if before the District was set off Congress had passed an unconstitutional act affecting its inhabitants, it would have been void. If done after the District was created, it would have been equally void; in other words, Congress could not do indirectly, by carving out the District, what it could not do directly."

With all due respect to the learned justice, this illustration suggests a contingency that is impossible. Congress desires to affect certain persons by unconstitutional legislation who now live in a State. This it can not do. Therefore, it creates the District of Columbia out of the territory on which they live in order that it may legislate with reference to them unrestrained by the Constitumay legislate with reference to them unrestrained by the Constitution. Could anything be more finical? He says:

"The District still remained a part of the United States, protected by the Constitution. Indeed, it would have been a fanciful construction to hold that territory which had been once a part of the United States ceased to be such by being ceded directly to the Federal Government."

Therefore he says the conclusion was right in Loughborough vs. Blake, but the reasons were wrong, mere dicta.

This appears to be the adhesive feature of the Constitution. Like a way appendant or appurtenant, or certain covenants in a deed, the Constitution runs with the land, and is inseparably united thereto. The proposition has the merit of novelty. It is submitted that no sufficient reason is given for its existence, and that it rests upon the unsupported assertion of the learned justice that it is so. He does not inform us how, but it is.

If this adhesive proposition is sound, what becomes of the decision in Hepburn vs. Ellzey? Prior to the creation of the District of Columbia it is clear that any citizen of either State living in the territory afterwards made the District had the constitutional right to bring an action in the circuit court of the United States. Being a constitutional right, it "had attached to it irrevocably." Therefore no power could deprive a citizen of the District of that right. It seems that Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, notwithstanding all this, disconnected the citizen in that case from the Constitution. Perhaps he had not heard of this theory, or can it be that only a part of the Constitution adheres? Only so much as is necessary to escape Loughborough vs. Blake? This may be the case, in view of the fact that in 1897 in Hooe vs. Jamieson (166 U. S., 395), a case turning on the precise point decided in Hepburn vs. Ellzey, the court still persisted in disconnecting a citizen of the District of Columbia from the Constitution and affirmed *Hep*burn vs. Ellzey, and Mr. Justice Brown concurred in the opinion.

Moreover, in the Downes opinion he cites with approval those cases for the purpose of showing that the District of Columbia is not a "State," and therefore no part of the United States, and then on the next page asks us to believe that, having once been a part "it still remained a part of the United States." Is not this part, "it still remained a part of the United States." Is not this asking too much, and will not some new and more universally operating theory have to be evolved before Loughborough vs. Blake is disposed of?

Mr. Justice White in his opinion undertakes with great diligence, research, and ability to establish the doctrine that "the treaty-making power can not incorporate territory into the United States without the express or implied assent of Congress," and that "Congress is vested with the right to determine when incorporation arises." His idea is that undesirable territory otherwise would be "without the consent of the American people as would be "without the consent of the American people as expressed by Congress, and without any hope of relief, indissolubly made a part of our common country." In other words, once incorporated territory can not afterwards be alienated or disposed of. His object undoubtedly is to establish a condition during which "when the unfitness of particular territory for incorporawhich when the unitness of particular territory for incorpora-tion is demonstrated, the occupation will terminate;" that is, during which it can be disposed of. He holds that Porto Rico has not been "incorporated," and therefore the uniformity clause does not apply. Mr. Justice Harlan most pertinently sug-"What is meant by such incorporation we are not fully gests: "What is meant by such incorporation we are not fully informed, nor are we instructed as to the precise mode in which it is to be accomplished." Mr. Justice White's opinion is, unfortunately, lacking in perspicuity upon both of these points. He repudiates Mr. Justice Brown's method of disposing of Loughborough vs. Blake. He cites that case to support the following proposition:

"But the power just referred to, as well as the qualification of

But the power just referred to, as well as the qualification of uniformity, restrains Congress from imposing an impost duty on uniformity, restrains Congress from imposing an impost duty on goods coming into the United States from a territory which has been incorporated into and forms a part of the United States."

Assuming that prior to 1820 the District of Columbia, in the sense in which he uses that term, had been "incorporated into" the United States, the case from this view would clearly apply. He fails to inform us when or how it was so "incorporated," but he undoubtedly assumes it to be a fact. He then makes this criticism of Mr. Justice Brown's treatment of that case, saying:

"The question the principle above stated on the assumption that

"To question the principle above stated on the assumption that the rulings on this subject of Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in Loughborough vs. Blake were mere dicta seems to me to be entirely inadmissible."

Here four of the majority justices concede the authority of Loughborough vs. Blake, and it clearly controls the Downes case unless it can be made to appear, not assumed, that the District of Columbia had at that time been "incorporated," and no single fact is stated that it is claimed even tends to show incorporation. In the absence of such showing the decision in the Downes case should be reversed. If the understanding of Congress were entitled to control, which fortunately it is not, it clearly had not been "incorporated," as in 1871 Congress passed an act extending the Constitution to the District, an idle ceremony if it had been "incorporated" into "the United States" for fifty years. To be sure, Mr. Justice Brown says this was done "to put at rest all doubts regarding the applicability of the Constitution," but our attention is not directed to anything in the act that indicates such a purpose, or in the facts connected with its passage. If this act had no real significance, how much significance is to be attached to similar legislation in connection with the Territories, which is relied upon to answer the case that holds that the Territories are a part of the United States and that the Constitution was operative therein without the aid of legislation? The inconsistencies of the court lead them into difficulties whichever way they turn. It is submitted that the majority have not succeeded in escaping from the "embarrassment" of Loughborough vs. Blake.

INSURANCE CO. VS. CANTER.

The Canter case, which turned upon the power of the Territorial legislature to create a court exercising admiralty jurisdiction, is erroneously supposed to establish the fact that the Territories are not a part of the United States. This case is misquoted and misconceived. Mr. Justice Brown states that Mr. Chief Justice Marshall held "that territory ceded by treaty becomes a part of the nation to which it is annexed, either on the terms stipulated in the treaty of cession or upon such as its new master shall impose The context shows that this is a misapprehension, as Mr. Chief Justice Marshall was simply stating a general rule of international law as to which there is no question, and not the law of that case.

He said:
"The usage of the world is, if a nation be not entirely subdued,
"The usage of the world is, if a nation be not entirely subdued, to consider the holding of conquered territory as a mere military occupation until its fate shall be determined at the treaty of occupation until its fate shall be determined at the treaty of peace. If it be ceded by the treaty, the acquisition is confirmed, and the ceded territory becomes a part of the nation to which it is annexed, either on the terms stipulated in the treaty of cession or on such as its new master shall impose."

That he did not state it as the law of that case is clear also from the fact that, immediately following a full statement of these general principles, he refers to the fact that the treaty provided that "as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution," the inhabitants of Florida "shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States; * * * and admitted to the enjoyment of the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States." Note the language, "shall be incorporated." "and admitted." Appearance of the United States." Note the language, "shall be incorporated." "and admitted." of the citizens of the United States." Note the language, "shall be incorporated," "and admitted." Apparently all to be done, not a fact accomplished by the cession. The act of Congress creating the Territorial legislature enumerated certain constitutional privileges and immunities which it conferred upon Florida. Mr. Whipple, in his argument, insisted that there was no occasion for this enumeration "if the inhabitants of Florida were entitled to them upon the act of cession," and Mr. Justice Johnson, in his opinion in the case in the circuit court, took the same view.

Notwithstanding all this, "the great Judge," speaking for a unanimous court, denied this contention and said:

"This treaty is the law of the land, and admits the inhabitants of Florida to the enjoyment of the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States."

Mark it, not the act of Congress, as was urged by counsel and Mr. Justice Johnson, but the "treaty * * * admits the inhabitants of Florida to the enjoyment of the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States." The fact that privileges and immunities were conferred by act of Congress is not even mentioned. When the inhabitants had all the "privileges, rights, and immunities of citizens" they were clearly citizens and if Mr. Chief Indian Manual Privileges. zens, and if Mr. Chief Justice Marshall is correct they became such by the act of cession, and the territory was also "incorpo-rated in the Union" by the same act, without the aid or consent of Congress. He expressly declines to pass upon the question as to whether "its new master" can "impose" terms, as in the next sentence he says:

"It is unnecessary to inquire whether this is not their condi-tion independent of stipulation."

If "independent of stipulation" they acquired these constitutional rights, certainly if Mr. Justice Brown's adhesive theory is tional rights, certainly if Mr. Justice Brown's adhesive theory is sound they could not be deprived of them by any terms "such as its new master shall impose," and it was not so held. Mr. Whipple and Mr. Webster both contended that the right of representation was the supreme test of incorporation and citizenship. Mr. Whipple said: "If the Constitution is in force in Florida, why is it not represented in Congress?" Mr. Webster said: "What is Florida? It is no part of the United States. How can it be? How is it represented?" This is Webster's only reason, and this remark is it represented?' This is Webster's only reason, and this remark is cited by Mr. Justice Brown, as well as by Mr. Justice McKenna, in the De Lima case, apparently as entitled to weight. It may be remarked in passing that at the most this was merely Webster's argument in the discharge of his professional duty, bound to make the most effective presentation of his client's case, and does not necessarily indicate his own opinion.

The "great Judge" clearly apprehended, however, the broad distinction which exists between civil rights and political rights, and that one by no means involves the other, as he denied this contention, and held that "They do not, however, participate in political power; they do not share in the government till Florida shall become a State." He had just held that the inhabitants had all the "privileges and immunities" of citizens. Therefore repall the "privileges and immunities" of citizens. Therefore representation was not one of them. The right of representation necessarily stands or falls with the right to the elective franchise, as they who can not vote can not be said to be represented. That citizenship does not involve the right of suffrage is well settled. In Minor vs. Happersett (21 Wall., 162, 1875) the court held: "The word 'citizen' in the Constitution of the United States Conveys the idea of membership of a nation and nothing more, Women are citizens of the United States. The right of suffrage is not one of the necessary priviliges of a citizen of the United States. The United States Constitution did not add the right of suffrage to the privileges and immunities of citizenship as they existed at the time the Constitution was adopted. Suffrage was not coextensive with the citizenship of the States at the time of its adoption. It was not intended to make all citizens of the United States voters. The Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone." (United States vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542; Murphy vs. Ram-

What becomes then of Webster's only test? When his sole reason fails, how can his conclusion be sustained? There is much 164 U.S., 15.) confusion of thought, and many erroneous conclusions are reached, by the failure to bear in mind this clear distinction. I notice that the advocates of legislative absolutism, while they do not deny this distinction, fail to make conspicuous, in the discussion of the insular questions, that the only question is one of civil and not of political rights. It is undoubtedly the popular impression that to hold that the Porto Rican or the Filipino is a citizen of the United States is at once to vest him with the right of suffrage, and create a disturbing element in our political economy, when nothing could be further from the fact. The elective franchise is popularly supposed to be the distinguishing badge of citizenship, but it is not even one of the elements of citizenship of the United States. Voting, representation, and the consent of the governed are not guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States or involved in this discussion.

This misapprehension, no doubt, contributes in a large degree to whatever popular support absolutism may have. It is akin, though much more general, to that other idea that so long as these possessions can be held as colonies, "territory appurtenant and belonging to the United States," "disembodied shades," in some way the possibility of States being created out of them is made more remote. But the fact is that the Constitution requires no intermediary, preparatory, or Territorial stage for an intending State. It is equally as competent to create one out of Porto Rico as out of Oklahoma. Given a President, Senate, and House of Representatives of the same party, and if desired a "disembodied shade," by a mere act of Congress, becomes one or more sovereign States, the number limited only by political exigency. If our Democratic friends obtained power, and desired to intrench themselves therein on the line of free trade against protection, how long would it take them to be spangle the Orient with States? These are pleasing but inherent contingencies.

Mr. Justice Brown seems to derive aid and comfort from the opinion of Mr. Justice Johnson in the Canter case in the circuit court, as does Mr. Justice McKenna in the De Lima case.

as does Mr. Justice McKelma in the De Lind case. Two proportions are cited from his opinion, and thought to be significant:

First. The fanciful distinction between "territory acquired from the aborigines," also "by the establishment of a disputed line," and that which "was previously subject to the jurisdiction of another sovereign," the Constitution immediately attaching, it is supposed, to one and not to the other.

Second The fact that cortain "privileges and immediate".

Second. The fact that certain "privileges and immunities" were "enumerated in the act of Congress," showing that they were not acquired by treaty.

While the court reached the same conclusion as did Mr. Justice Johnson, his first proposition was entirely ignored, and his second, as we have seen, distinctly denied by the court. Inasmuch as Mr. Justice Johnson did not file any separate opinion, we must infer that he was satisfied with the reasoning of the court, and conceded his own reasoning to be wrong. Under these circumstances how can his opinion as to these points be relied on as an stances how can his opinion as to these points be relied on as an authority? Mr. Justice Brown states that the result of the Canter case is that Congress, when authorizing the creation of a Territorial court, "must act independently of the Constitution, and upon territory which is not part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution." He also says: "But if they be a part of the United States, it is difficult to see how Congress could create courts in such Territories, except under the judicial clause of the Constitution." With all due respect to the learned justice, I submit that no such conclusion follows from that case, that it does not even tend to establish it, and that the decision that it does not even tend to establish it, and that the decision does not necessarily show that Florida either did or did not become a "part of the United States" by the act of cession.

If it became a "part of the United States" by the act of cession.

sion, it is clear that the territorial legislature could pass no valid law that would be "inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States." But the act of Congress creating the territorial legislature provided that "no law shall be valid which is inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States," and Mr. Chief Justice Marshall expressly held that the powers of the legislature "were subject to the restriction that their laws shall not be inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States," so that in either case, whether by act of cession or by act of Congress, the provisions of the Constitution equally controlled the territorial legislature. In either case, so far as the operation of the Constitution was concerned, this territory was to all legal intents and purposes a "part of the United States." It matters not how the Constitution reached the territory, so far as that case was concerned, so long as it was there. The court not only recognized the application of the Constitution by citing that provision of the act of Congress and expressly so declaring, but by holding, after expressly examining that question, that the judiciary clause of the Constitution did not apply to the territory. If the Constitution had not been operative, the inquiry as to whether the judiciary clause applied to the territory would have

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Justice Brown thinks "it is difficult to see how Congress could create courts in such territories, except under the judicial clause of the Constitution," that ries, except under the Judicial clause of the Constitution," that is precisely what the "great Judge" held they could do. Instead, then, of holding that this territory was not a "part of the United States," the case proceeds altogether upon the theory that it was, and bound by the Constitution, but that the power exercised was not inconsistent with any of its provisions. This analysis disposes of the reflection which is made upon the court when Mr. Justice Brown says:

"In delivering his opinion in this case Mr. Chief Justice Marshall made no reference whatever to the prior case of Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheat., 317), in which he had intimated that the territories were part of the United States."

"Intimated" is inadequate when characterizing an express declaration. He had no occasion to refer to that case, as in the opinion being rendered he had not even "intimated" either directly or indirectly the contrary. All of the Territorial cases are based upon the Canter case, and they therefore have no more tendency to show that a Territory is not "a part of the United States." As to this point they fall with it. My view of this case is not new, as Mr. Whipple contended for the legality of the court "to the same extent if the Constitution is or if it is not per se in force in Florida."

CROSS VS. HARRISON.

It is submitted that Cross vs. Harrison is inconsistent with and is virtually overruled by the judgment in the Downes case. It is the only "case from the foundation of the Government" where "the revenue laws of the United States have been enforced in acquired territory without the action of the President or the consent of Congress, express or implied." After the ratification of the treaty ceding the territory of California, and before any act of Congress, the duties prescribed by the general tariff laws were collected in California, and the principal question was whether the proceeding was legal. The court sustained it, saying on the precise point in question:

"But after the ratifications of the treaty California became a part of the United States or a ceded, conquered territory.'

As to the precise time they are more specific: "By the ratifications of the treaty California became a part of the United States. And as there is nothing differently stipulated in the treaty with respect to commerce, it became instantly bound and privileged by the laws which Congress had passed to raise a revenue from duties on imports and tonnage."

A fortiori, then, was it "bound and privileged" by the Constitution, the supreme law.

It was not only contended that California was not "a part of the United States," but that as no collection district had been established the duties were illegally imposed. The court answered these suggestions, construing the provision of the Constitution now under consideration, saying: "The right claimed to land foreign goods within the United States at any place out of a collection district, if allowed, would be a violation of that provision of the Constitution which enjoins that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

The case turned on this point, and the court felt that it had been demonstrated, as they said:

"It having been shown that the ratifications of the treaty made California a part of the United States, and that as soon as it became so the territory became subject to the acts which were in force to regulate foreign commerce with the United States."

The court cited with approval a letter from Secretary Buchanan, containing this statement:

"This government de facto will, of course, exercise no power inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law of the land. For this reason no import duties can be levied in California on articles the growth, produce, or the manufacture of the United States, as no such duties can be imposed in any other part of our Union on the productions of California, * * * for the obvious reason that California is within the territory of the United States." * * * This is the precise question involved here.

Bearing in mind that this was a unanimous opinion, these express declarations would seem to justify Mr. Justice White's cautious statement that the "opinion undoubtedly expressed the thought that by the ratification of the treaty * * * the territory had become a part of the United States," and would require some answer before a majority of one would be justified in ren-dering a judgment inconsistent therewith.

Mr. Justice Brown's method is to be commended for its ease. While he cites the case with approval in the De Lima case, in the Downes case he does not even refer to it. He simply ignores it. Mr. Justice White sees that this case is utterly inconsistent with his theory that a territory can not become a part of the United States without "the express or implied assent of Congress," and makes an earnest effort to reconcile it.

He does not go so far as to assert that the fact that the treaty He does not go so far as to assert that the fact that the treaty "accomplished the cession, by changing the boundaries of the two countries," in other words "by bringing the acquired territory within the described boundaries of the United States," may have had some weight, but so intimates. It can not be soberly contended that by the simple expedient of running a line by description around a territory the treaty-making power can make that territory a part of the United States, when by describing the process as an annexation it would be beyond their constitutional nower to thus incorporate it. By indirection they would be able process as an annexation it would be beyond their constitutional power to thus incorporate it. By indirection they would be able to easily work direction out. Of such a principle it could be well said, "I am become as a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." To hold that in using such language there was any purpose other than convenience of description is to impeach the intelligence of those who were responsible for the treaty. His propositions are:

First. "After the ratification of the treaty various laws were enacted by Congress, which in effect treated the Territory as acquired by the United States, and the executive officers of the Government, conceiving that these acts were an implied or express Government, conceiving that these acts were an implied or express ratification of the provisions of the treaty by Congress, acted upon the assumption that the provisions of the treaty were thus made operative, and hence incorporation had become efficacious."

Second. Inasmuch as the law contained no intimation as to Second. Inasmuch as the law contained no intimation as to ratification, and the executive officers acted before they were passed, another hypothesis was necessary. He says "that as the treaty provided for incorporation in express terms, and Congress had acted without repudiating it, its provisions should be at once enforced." This proposition, shorn of its rhetoric, is: First, Territory can not be incorporated without the consent of Congress; second, the consent may be expressed or implied, and, third, it may be assumed if the treaty is not repudiated. Whatever else may be said of this, its convenient, flexible, and universal character must be conceded, as no state of facts can be conceived that would be inconsistent with its application. A proposition of this character is necessary to answer Cross vs. Harrison.

After having stated that the treaty "included the ceded territory within the boundaries of the United States, but also expressly provided for incorporation," Mr. Justice White says: "The decision of the court * * * undoubtedly took the fact I have first stated into view." That is of course possible, but it is absolute that the court in the court is a line of the course possible. absolutely certain that the opinion does not contain a line or word that sustains the suggestion. While other treaties were discussed in the opinion and by counsel (the original briefs are not on file), there is not the slightest intimation that in this particular any distinction was made between the treaty under discussion and the other treaties. Its peculiarity as to "boundaries" and "incorporation," now so absolutely essential to a correct conclusion on the new theory, are not even mentioned, and the discussion was elaborate and exhaustive. Moreover, the treaty did not provide for immediate "incorporation in express terms," as is thought. Inasmuch as Mr. Justice White does not quote the article relating to incorporation, I give it here in connection with the similar clause in the treaties ceding Florida and Porto Rico, and in their order.

ARTICLE VI. "The inhabitants of the territories which His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States by this treaty shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution, and admitted to the enjoyment of the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States."

TREATY WITH MEXICO. FEBRUARY 2, 1848.

ARTICLE IX. "The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted, at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction."

TREATY OF PARIS. APRIL 11, 1899.

ARTICLE IX. "The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress."

The Mexican treaty, it will be seen, does not attempt immediately by the treaty to incorporate the territory into the Union. It expressly remits that question to Congress. "Shall be incorpowhen? Now, at once? No. "At the proper time." By whom? Who is to determine the time? ("To be judged of by the Congress of the United States")—"to the enjoyment of all the rights gress of the United States ")—"to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution"—"and in the meantime"—that is, until "incorporated" by the Congress—"shall be maintained and protected, etc.,"clearly postponing citizenship. In what substantial respect does this differ from the like clause in the treaty of Paris? In the Paris treaty civil rights were to "be determined by the Congress." In the Mexican treaty they were to be "admitted to" those rights when Congress should so judge. Notwithstanding the express reference of those questions to Congress by the treaty, the court held that "by the ratification of the treaty California became a part of the United States." No good reason has been shown why the same result did not follow from the same facts in the case of Porto Rico.

DRED SCOTT VS. SANFORD.

The most glaring case of misconception is in connection with the Dred Scott case. As to this case Mr. Justice Brown says:

"It must be admitted that this case is a strong authority in favor of the plaintiff, and if the opinion of the Chief Justice be taken at its full value it is decisive in his favor.'

I shall attempt to show that as to the issue here, whether the Constitution is operative in the Territories, it is to be "taken at its full value." There was no dissent upon that point. The ways parted when the effect of the Constitution thus operating was considered. Mr. Chief Justice Taney held that the Constitution recognized property in a slave, and protected that property against adverse legislation. On this point Mr. Justice McLean and Mr.

adverse legislation. On this point Mr. Justice McLean and Mr. Justice Curtis dissented. As to the operation of the Constitution in the Territories Mr. Chief Justice Taney said:

"It [the Government] enters upon it [a Territory] with its powers over the citizen strictly defined and limited by the Constitution, from which it derives its own existence and by virtue of which alone it continues to exist and act as a government and sovereignty."

"The Federal Government can exercise no power over his person or property beyond what that instrument confers, nor lawfully deny any right which it has reserved. * * * It has no power of any kind beyond it, and it can not when it enters into a Territory of the United States put off its character and assume discretionary or despotic powers which the Constitution has denied to it." denied to it.

Mr. Justice Wayne and Mr. Justice Grier concurred fully in the opinion of the Chief Justice. Mr. Justice Nelson expressed no opinion on this question. Mr. Justice Daniel said:

"Scarcely anything more illogical or extravagant can be imagined than the attempt to deduce from this provision in the Constitution [territory or other property clause] a power to destroy or in any wise to impair the civil and political rights of the citizens of the United States. * * * ""

Mr. Justice Compbell said:

Mr. Justice Campbell said:
"I look in vain among the discussions of the time for the assertion of a supreme sovereignty for Congress over the territory then belonging to the United States, or that they might thereafter acquire. I seek in vain for an enunciation that a consolidated power had been inaugurated, whose subject comprehended an empire and which had no restriction but the discretion of Congress."

Mr. Institute Mr. I consolidated power had been resident to be the discretion of Congress." Mr. Justice McLean said:

"No powers can be exercised which are prohibited by the Constitution, or which are contrary to its spirit. * * * This is the limitation of all the Federal powers."

"No implication of a power can arise which is inhibited by the Constitution, or which may be against the theory of its construc-

Mr. Justice Curtis said:

Mr. Justice Curtis said:

"If, then, this clause [territory and other property clause] does contain power to legislate respecting the territory, what are the limits of that power? To this I answer, that, in common with all the other legislative powers of Congress, it finds limits in the express prohibitions on Congress not to do certain things; that, in the exercise of legislative power, Congress can not pass an ex post facto law or bill of attainder; and so in respect to each of the other prohibitions contained in the Constitution."

The counsel for Dred Scott made this admission in his argu-

The counsel for Dred Scott made this admission in his argument: "I admit that whether the power of Congress to legislate be given expressly or by implication, it is given with the limitation that it shall be exercised in subordination to the Constitu-tion, and that if it be exercised in violation of any provisions of the Constitution the act would be void." No matter what has happened since the Dred Scott case, a proposition as to which both sides agreed can not be said to have been impaired.

The Monthly Law Reporter for June, 1857, contains a very able and exhaustive review of the Dred Scott case of fifty-three pages, ascribed to John Lowell and Horace Gray, jr., esqs. (now Mr. Justice Gray, of the United States Supreme Court). The article makes no criticism of the proposition that the Constitution extends to the Territories, but concedes it, saying: "In no previous case in the courts has it ever been suggested that the power of Congress to govern the Territories was limited in any respect, except by the express provisions of the Constitution," and cites with approval Mr. Justice McLean's statement that "the Constitution was formed for our whole country. The expansion or contraction of our territory required no change in the fundamental law. It pronounces the highest encomium upon Mr. Justice McLean's and Mr. Justice Curtis's opinions, saying of the latter that "by the common consent of the profession and of the public" it was "the strongest, clearest, as well as the most thorough and elaborate of all.

Abraham Lincoln, in his great debate with Douglas, bitterly and savagely attacked the Supreme Court for its decision in the Dred Scott case. He went so far as persistently to charge the majority with having entered into a conspiracy against liberty. He never criticized the proposition that the Constitution controlled Congress in legislating for the Territories. He conceded that. In his Galesburg speech he defined his position thus:

"The essence of the Dred Scott case is compressed into the sentence which I will now read: 'Now, as we have already said in an earlier part of this opinion, upon a different point, the right of property in a slave is distinctly and expressly affirmed in the Constitution.' I repeat it, 'the right of property in a slave is dis-tinctly and expressly affirmed in the Constitution.'"

The perpetuation of slavery by the Constitution, not the extension of the Constitution to the Territories, was in his view the infamy of the Dred Scott case. It was this that made Sumner call the Supreme Court a "barracoon." A base and studious effort outside of the court has been made to show that the theory that the Constitution controls Congress in legislating for the Territories is the special property of Calhoun, and if overthrown another nail is driven in the coffin of Calhounism—another clod placed upon the grave of disunion and slavery. It proceeds from insufficient knowledge or pure demagogism.

Politically, constitutional control was first announced by the Liberty Abolitionist party in 1844 in their platform in these words: "Resolved, That the General Government has, under the Constitution, no power to establish or continue slavery anywhere, and therefore that all treaties and acts of Congress establishing, continuing, or favoring slavery in the District of Columbia, in the Territory of Florida, or on the high seas, are unconstitutional, and all attempts to hold men as property within the limits of exclusive national jurisdiction ought to be prohibited by law."

In 1856 the Democratic party in its platform, although it made frequent references to the Constitution and declared that Congress had no power under it to control "the domestic institutions of the several States," took no position on the constitutional limitations on the power of Congress to govern the Territories, and in 1860 it expressed no opinion upon this question, but contented itself with the declaration that "as differences of opinion existed" as to that point, "that the Democratic party will abide by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the questions of constitutional law." They did not deny the principle, but they did not affirm it. On the other hand, in 1856, the Republican party made the operation of the Constitution over the Territories an article of next faith the second plant of the interest. ritories an article of party faith, the second plank of their platform

"Resolved, That, with our Republican fathers, we hold it to be a self-evident truth that all men are endowed with the inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that the primary object and ulterior design of our Federal Government were to secure these rights to all persons within its exclusive jurisdiction; that, as our Republican fathers, when they had abolished slavery in all our national territory, ordained that no person should be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, it becomes our duty to maintain this provision of the Constitution against all attempts to violate it for the purpose of establishing slavery in the United States, by positive legislation prohibiting its existence or extension therein; that we deny the authority of Congress, of a Territorial legislature, of any individual or association of individuals, to give legal existence to slavery in any Territory of the United States while the present Constitution shall be maintained."

Here is an express recognition and reliance upon the proposi-tion that the Constitution controlled Congress in legislating for the Territories. In 1860 it denounced the slavery feature of the Dred Scott decision and affirmed its position on the Constitution and Territories as follows:

"Sec. 7. That the new dogma-that the Constitution of its own force carries slavery into any or all of the Territories of the United States—is a dangerous political heresy, at variance with the explicit provisions of that instrument itself, with contemporaneous exposition, and with legislative and judicial precedent, is revolutionary in its tendency and subversive of the peace and harmony of the country."

"Sec. 8. That the normal condition of all the territory of the United States is that of freedom; that as our Republican fathers, United States is that of freedom; that as our Republican fathers, when they had abolished slavery in all our national territory, ordained that 'no person should be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law,' it becomes our duty, by legislation, whenever such legislation is necessary, to maintain this provision of the Constitution against all attempts to violate it; and we deny the authority of Congress, of a Territorial legislature, or of any individuals to give legal existence to slavery in any Territory of the United States."

The Republican party upon this platform entered upon and fought its great battle for human liberty. Because it waged a successful warfare it can hardly be said that the principles for which it fought were overthrown in the contest. The Republican which it fought were overthrown in the contest. The Republican party said the Constitution went to the Territories and carried liberty with it. It is immaterial who originally championed the the extension of the Constitution to the Territories, nor does the fact that it was once prostituted to a base purpose concern us. It has been dedicated to freedom. The Republican party has never by any platform utterance reversed its position on this question. This great principle was jauntily described by Benton as a "vagary." In the light of this history how can it with any propriety be said of the only proposition laid down in the Dred Scott case that is raised here, that "the country did not acquiesce in the opinion, and that the civil war which shortly thereafter followed produced such changes in judicial as well as public sentiment as to seriously impair the authority of that case?" That may be said of the slavery branch of the proposition, as to which there was an "irrepressible conflict," but not as to a proposition upon which all agreed.

Mr. Justice Brown suggests "that in view of the excited political condition of the country at the time it is unfortunate that he [Mr. Chief Justice Taney] felt compelled to discuss the question upon the merits," but that does not impair the authority of a principle as to which the contending parties stood on common ground. In any event this is to be said of Mr. Chief Justice Taney's opinion, assuming that it passed upon a question uncalled for by the issue presented, there is nothing in the language of his opinion that indicates it was being rendered for a purpose, that it had in view any political considerations, or allowed any consequences to influence the result. Can as much be said of those who criticise him? In the Dred Scott case the court worked out from a conceded proposition, indorsed by the Republican party, an erroneous conclusion, utterly repugnant to the enlightened Christian conscience of a free people, in order that the slavery of a race might be made enduring. In the Downes case a disagreeing court with one majority reverses this admitted principle, emancipates the Congress from the control of the Constitution in order that a land of vast fertility and great resources and ten millions of people and millions yet unborn may be forever subjected opinion that indicates it was being rendered for a purpose, that it lions of people and millions yet unborn may be forever subjected to the commercial servitude and the unrestrained will of the Republic. In this connection I call attention to the fact that Mr. Justice Brown finds it necessary to call again upon the great authority of Webster, the "expounder of the Constitution," and to cite Benton and Clay to buttress his cause.

He quotes Webster as saying, in discussing the proposition to extend the provisions of the Constitution to the Territories by act of Congress, that the "scheme" was an "absurdity" and an "impossibility." Yet it is not only now conceded on all hands that it can be done, but it is now claimed that once done it can not be undone. He further quotes him as saying "that Congress governed the Territories independently of the Constitution and incompatibly with it; that no part of it went to a Territory but what Congress chose to send [that is, you could send it piecemeal, but not in bulk]; that it could not of itself act anywhere, not even in the States for which it was made, and that it required an act of Congress to put it in operation before it had effect cite Benton and Clay to buttress his cause. an act of Congress to put it in operation before it had effect anywhere." This last suggestion would be startling if it did not a moment's examination appear to be clearly absurd. that the assertion is general, and does not discriminate between the provisions of the Constitution conferring powers to be exercised and imposing restrictions upon the exercise of power.

That a power to be exercised is dormant and inoperative even in a State until it is put in operation by an act of Congress we can understand, but the suggestion that a limitation or restriction upon the exercise of a power (and that is the question here) can not operate "anywhere, not even in the States," until the body to be restrained sees fit to impose the restraint is an absurdity that would be monumental if it had not been uttered by Webster. It illustrates the superficial manner in which he discussed the question. An examination of the debate from which the quotation is made shows that Webster's part in it was incidental and impromptu, as all he said does not occupy a page in the Globe. Unmindful of the fact of the distinction between political and civil rights, and that political rights furnish no test of the existervir rights, and that political rights furnish no test of the existence of civil rights, and forgetful that Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in the Loughborough case distinctly overruled that point, he still presses the representative idea as the sole test. He said:

"The Constitution—what is it? We extend the Constitution of the United States by law to territory. What is the Constitution of the United States? Is not its very first principle that all within its influence and comprehension shall be represented in the legisleture which it establishes with not only a right of debate and lature which it establishes, with not only a right of debate and a right to vote in both Houses of Congress, but a right to partake in the choice of President and Vice-President?"

It has been discovered by experience that these direful results have not followed from the terrible act of extending the Consti-As Webster saw the Constitution go out, he could see a United States Senator coming in. Of what special value is his opinion when he thus confuses political privileges and legal rights?

He said further in the debate:
"How do you arrive at it by any reasoning or deduction? It can only be arrived at by the loosest of all possible constructions. It is said that this must be so, else the right of habeas corpus would be lost; undoubtedly these rights must be conferred by law before they can be enjoyed in a Territory."

That is, the right of habeas corpus does not exist in a Territory unless conferred by Congress, if Webster's view was sound. Is the court prepared to hold that the inhabitants of Porto Rico and the Philippines can be arbitrarily restrained of their liberties without form or process of law, and it can not be inquired into and relieved by habeas corpus unless Congress shall have so de-termined? It is a well-known fact that in at least one instance the powers that be have declined to face that issue. nothing can better illustrate the reckless extravagance with which Webster stated legal propositions in this debate than his asserwebster stated legal propositions in this debate than his assertion that the fact that the Constitution did not extend to the Territories had been "decided by the United States court over and over again for the last thirty years," when the fact is that he had been gathered to his fathers nearly forty-nine years before any such decision ever illumined our jurisprudence, and twenty-nine years before he spoke the court had in effect held that it did.

It is unjust to the representation of this great that it did.

It is unjust to the reputation of this great man to allow it to stand upon the loose and superficial statements in this debate in 1849. His purpose then was, no doubt, to repel the advance of slavery. With the same purpose in view in 1848, he made a great speech against the Mexican war, filling fifteen columns in the Globe, evidently the result of careful preparation. He discussed the precise question involved here—the acquisition of new territory, and the constitutional difficulties involved therein.

"Arbitrary governments may have territories and distant possessions, because arbitrary governments may rule them by different laws and different systems. Russia may rule in the Ukraine and the provinces of Caucasus and Kamschatka by different codes, ordinances, or ukases. We can do no such thing. They must be of us, part of us, or else strangers. I think I see that in progress which will disfigure and deform the Constitution. * * * I think I see a course adopted which is likely to turn the Constitution of the land into a deformed monster, into a curse rather than a blessing; in fact, a frame of an unequal government, not founded on popular representation, not founded on equality, but on the grossest inequality, and I think that this process will go on until this Union shall fall to pieces. I resist it to-day and always."

When his attention is concentrated upon the precise issue he does not appear to be of much assistance to the learned justice.

It is not surprising that this 1848 speech appears in his collected works with some slight revision, showing that it had passed under the master's hand, while that of 1849 has been allowed to molder under the dust of the Congressional Globe.

As to Benton, if we are to governed by his views, we need give ourselves little concern, as he starts his examination of the Dred affecting Congress in its legislative capacity, and on which the Supreme Court has no right to bind or control that body." It is perhaps enough to say of Mr. Renton that perhaps enough to say of Mr. Benton that this jurisconsult affirmed Mr. Webster's loose suggestions, saying:

"In the second place, it can not operate anywhere, not even in the States for which it was made, without acts of Congress to enforce it. This is true of the Constitution in every particular." And as he was nothing if not emphatic, in order to be precise, he said: "Every part of it is inoperative until put into action by a statute of Congress."

He went even further and claimed that it could not be done,

'And if the Constitution was extended to the Territories (which it can not be),"

A section of an act reading:
"And be it further enacted, That the Constitution and laws of the United States are hereby extended over and declared to be in force in said Territories of California and New Mexico, so far as the same or any provision thereof may be applicable," he declared to be "of absurd impossibility," when so great has been the increase of light since his day that four of the majority hold that the Constitution is in force in the Territories without the aid of statute so far "as applicable."

For the purpose of showing that he sustained this theory of legislative absolutism, Mr. Clay is quoted in this connection as saying:

"The idea that eo instanti upon the consummation of the treaty the Constitution of the United States spread itself over the acquired territory and carried along with it the institution of slavery is so irreconcilable with my comprehension or any reason I possess that I hardly know how to meet it."

This quotation is from Clay's great speech on the compromise An examination of the immediate context will disclose measures. An examination of the immediate context will disclose the fact that Clay did not attack the question of the Constitution extending to the Territories, but made his whole attack upon that branch of the proposition that held that it "carried along with it the institution of slavery." If this was not clear from the context, if the learned justice had read three columns more of the speech, he would have found Mr. Clay stating his position beyond all cavil and against the justice's contention. Mr. Clay said:

"The Government of the United States, therefore, possesses all the powers which Mexico possessed over those Territories, and the Government of the United States can do with reference to them, within, I admit, certain limits of the Constitution, whatever Mexico could have done. There are prohibitions upon the power of Congress within the Constitution, which prohibitions, I admit, must apply to Congress whenever it legislates, whether for the old States or the new Territories," * * * "but within the scope of those prohibitions, and none of them restrain the exercise of the power of Congress upon the subject of slavery, the powers of Congress are coextensive and coequal with the powers of Mexico prior to the cession."

This sounds like Mr. Justice Harlan's learned and patriotic opinion in the Downes case. Clay went further, and specifically referred to the District of Columbia, asserting with reference thereto "that Congress has all power which is not prohibited by some provision of the Constitution of the United States." It occurred to him that Congress was unrestrained by the Constitution anywhere. I do not know that Mr. Clay has ever been charged with being a great constitutional lawyer, but com-mon justice requires that his position when referred to on a great question like this should be stated with reasonable accuracy. It is not perceived how this triumvirate of statesmen give any material aid to the court. Perhaps it would on the whole have been as well if the learned justice had observed the correct maxim which he laid down early in the opinion: "The argument of individual legislators is no proper subject for judicial comment. They are so often influenced by personal or political considera-tions, or by the assumed necessities of the situation, that they can hardly be considered even as the deliberate views of the persons who make them, much less as dictating the construction to be put upon the Constitution by the courts.

There is a line of cases relating to the Territories and the Dis-There is a line of cases relating to the Territories and the District of Columbia, some of which are: Webster vs. Reid. 11 How., 437; Reynolds vs. United States, 98 U. and learned dissenting opinion, accurately says:
"Many of the later cases were brought from Territories over which Congress had professed to 'extend the Constitution,' or from the District after similar provision, but the decisions did not rest upon the view that the restrictions on Congress were self-imposed, and might be withdrawn at the pleasure of that

When I indorse this statement as accurate, I am not unmindful of the fact that Mr. Justice Brown states that, "In American Publishing Co. vs. Fisher, 166 U. S., 464, a similar law providing for majority verdicts was put upon the express ground above stated, that the organic act of Utah extended the Constitution over that Territory." The opinion in that case was by Mr. Justice Brewer; it is short, and I will quote all the court said on this point:

"The Territorial statute was relied upon as authority for this action. Its validity, therefore, must be determined. Whether the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that 'in suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved,' operates ex proprio vigore to invalidate this statute, may be a matter of dispute.

"But if the seventh amendment does not operate in and of itself to invalidate this Territorial statute, then Congress has full control over the Territories irrespective of any express constitu-tional limitations, and it has legislated in respect to this matter," Now comes the statement of the "ground" upon which the

"Therefore, either the seventh amendment to the Constitution, or these acts of Congress, or all together, secured to every litigant in a common-law action in the courts of the Territory of Utah the right to a trial by jury, and nullified any act of its legislature which attempted to take from him anything which is of the substance of that right."

LEGISLATIVE CONSTRUCTION.

Practical construction by legislative acts is given great weight, especially by Mr. Justice White in reaching his conclusion. Fairbanks vs. United States, decided at the same term, where the court held the stamp tax imposed on a foreign bill of lading to be equivalent to a duty on export and therefore unconstitutional, is an illustration of the uncertainty of the application of this rule. There the "practical construction" was all one way, and began in 1787, sustaining the tax. The court, however, ignored this rule on the ground that it could be "relied upon only in cases of doubt." It will be seen how readily "practical construction" can be eliminated by this rule.

Mr. Justice Brown and Mr. Justice Shiras gave it weight in the Downes case and ignored it in the Fairbanks case. Whatever the practical legislative construction may have been in the exercise of absolutism hitherto, it must be borne in mind that all of this legislation has been tentative and temporary in its character and purpose, preliminary to a regularly organized constitutional government. In case of Territories, with the exception, perhaps, of Alaska, it has always been in contemplation that they would in due time make States. It is perfectly conceivable that Congress, by reason of some supposed exigency incident to the formative period, might adopt temporary legislative expedients of doubtful constitutionality which they never would think of applying as a permanent rule to conditions expected to continue indefinitely.

THIRTEENTH AMENDMENT.

A question of supposed constitutional construction requires attention. The thirteenth amendment to the Constitution reads: "Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject

The last clause of this section, "or any place subject to their jurisdiction," is thought to be pregnant with importance. The Attorney-General thought it was "most remarkable and significant." Mr. Justice Brown thinks it "is also significant as showing that there may be places within the jurisdiction of the United States that are no part of the Union," and Mr. Justice White called attention "to the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution, which," he says, "to my mind seems to be conclusive," * * and "obviously this provision recognized that there may be places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, but which are not incorporated into it, and are hence not within but which are not incorporated into it, and are hence not within the United States in the completest sense of those words." The question here is what the fathers meant when, in 1787, they used certain language in the Constitution. used certain language in the Constitution. I shall not stop to elaborate the proposition whether the fact that their children, in 1865, used certain language in connection with the same subject has any legitimate tendency to show what the fathers did or did not mean when they used certain other language seventy-eight years before. It is possible that logic may bridge that chasm, but I should think it doubtful.

It will do no harm to inquire what, if anything, the children meant by the use of this "significant" clause. I have examined the history of that amendment, and I beg to suggest, with all due diffidence, that no significance whatever was attached to its use by those who used it. This amendment was introduced by Hon. J. B. Henderson, then a Senator from Missouri and a slaveholder, on the 11th day of January, 1864, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, of which Lyman Trumbull was chairman. It then "Article I. Slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, shall not exist in the United States."

On the 10th day of February Mr. Trumbull reported it back from the Judiciary in its present form, making an oral report, as follows:

"The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred various petitions from different parts of the country, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States so as to incorporate a provision prohibiting slavery in all the States and Territories of the Union, and also a joint resolution (S. No. 16) proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and a joint resolution (S. No. 24) to provide for submitting to the several States an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, instructed me to report back an amendment to the Senate of the joint resolution No. 16 in the way of a substitute. I will state that the amendment, as recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, provides for submitting to the legislatures of the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the Emted States so that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof a party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction; and also that Congress shall have power to enforce this article by proper legislation. I desire to give notice to the Senate that I shall, at an early day, call for the consideration of this resolution."

No written report appears to have been made; S. No. 16 was the Henderson resolution. It will be observed that Trumbull's report gives no reason for the adding of this clause, and does not refer to it specifically as distinguished from any other clause. I have examined the debate, and not only was absolutely no significance attached to this clause, but I do not even find it referred to. The burden of the debate was whether slavery should be abolished, and practically no attention was paid to the terms of the amendment by which it was to be accomplished. Sumner, it is true, made some verbal criticisms and suggested several amendments to perfect the language, from his view, none of which were adopted. He did not, however, make any reference to this clause. The language of an amendment offered by him February 8, 1864, referred to and adversely reported by the Judiciary, negatives the idea that the reason suggested for the use of this clause existed. His amendment read:

"Everywhere in the limits of the United States, and each State

"Everywhere in the limits of the United States, and each State and Territory thereof, all persons are equal before the law, so that no person can hold another as a slave."

Here the words "and each State and Territory thereof" are clearly repeated by way of emphasis, and the fact that the word "Territory" is used in the same clause in the same manner and for the same purpose as the word "State," makes it evident that a "Territory" was as much understood to be within the United States as a "State," and that there was as much occasion for referring to one as to the other. Very few references were made ferring to one as to the other. Very few references were made to the amendment in debate. Mr. Harlan put this question: "Ought the Constitution of the United States to be so amended as to abolish slavery, or to prevent the existence of slavery in all the States of the Union?" Mr. Holman said: "You now propose to abolish slavery throughout the United States." Mr. Thayer stated that the effect of the amendment would be "to prohibit slavery forever within the territory of the United States." Mr. Orth said, after quoting the amendment: "The effect of such amendment will be to prohibit slavery in these United States;" not a word as to a desire to reach territory beyond the limits of the United States, or the necessity of this "remarkable" clause for that purpose.

Mr. Henderson is still living, vigorous in intellect, and a lawyer of experience and great ability, as well as a man of large affairs. I called his attention to the significance attached to this clause, asking him if he could give me anything from his personal recollection that would throw any light upon this "conclusive" incident. I find he was an intimate friend of Senator Trumbull. I have from him an exceedingly interesting letter, too long for quotation here in full. I will place it in the RECORD at the end of this speech. Among other things, he says:

"Whatever else these words may refer to, they surely were not intended to embrace or refer to the territories of the United

So far as anything that was said or done by those who were a part of this history, the clause was apparently used for the purpose suggested by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller in his dissenting opinion, "simply out of abundant caution." When it does not appear that a single individual during that time ever thought specially of, or attached the slightest significance to, this clause, is it not to the last degree improbable that any one of the milis it not to the last degree improbable that any one of the mil-lions that voted upon the amendment exercised any thought or had any intention with reference thereto. Yet Mr. Justice Brown suggests that: "Not only did the people in adopting the Thirteenth Amendment thus recognize a distinction between the United States and 'any place subject to their jurisdiction,'" as though the people had intelligently and purposely passed upon this question and significantly embedded it in their fundamental law. How can this amendment add anything to the discussion? How can this amendment add anything to the discussion? Still we must concede that much depends upon the point of view.

These opinions illustrate this. Mr. Justice Brown says:
"The decisions of this court upon the subject have not been altogether harmonious. Some of them are based upon the theory that the Constitution does not apply to the Territories without legislation. [It would be instructive to have these pointed out.] Other cases arising from Territories where such legislation has been had contain language which would justify the inference that such legislation was unnecessary and that the Constitution took effect immediately upon the cession of the Territory to the United States.'

Mr. Justice White says:
"Let me now proceed to show that the decisions of this court, without a single exception, are absolutely in accord with the true rule as evolved from a correct construction of the Constitution as a matter of first impression and as shown by the history of the Government, which has been previously epitomized."
"How shall we find the concord of this discord?"

THE CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED.

With the greatest respect for the court, I feel bound to say that it seems to me that the majority justices were too profoundly impressed with the supposed consequences of an adverse decision.

In Mr. Justice McKenna's view it took "this great country out of the world and shuts it up within itself." Mr. Justice Brown thought: "If such be their status [citizens] the consequences will be extremely serious. Indeed, it is doubtful if Congress would ever assent to the annexation of territory upon the condition that its is abolitate however forcing they are the correlability trail. its inhabitants, however foreign they may be to our habits, traditions, and modes of life, shall become at once citizens of the United States. * * * Such requirement would bring them at once within our internal-revenue system * * * and applying it to territories which have had no experience of this kind, and where it would prove an intolerable burden. * * * Our interal-revenue laws, if applied in that island, would prove oppressive and ruinous to many people and interests. * * * A false step at ruinous to many people and interests. * * * A false step at this time might be fatal to the development of what Chief Justice Marshall called the American Empire," and "the question at once arises whether large concessions ought not to be made." And Mr. Justice White thought that if incorporated, "it resulted that the millions of people to whom that treaty related, were, without the consent of the American people, as expressed by Congress, and without any hope of relief, indissolubly made a part of our common country." our common country.

What are the direful consequences that inhere in the application of all of the provisions of the Constitution to the Territories? I can understand how sugar and tobacco planters and raisers of tropical fruits can see "serious" consequences in conditions that might compel them by competition to reduce the price of their goods to the consumer, and hence the importance of being able to discriminate against such competitors. Such consequences, how-ever, would not necessarily be very "serious" to the great mass of our people.

Inasmuch as voting and representation are not elements, what other consequences are there that should be guarded against with Is it the competition of cheap labor? emancipated millions in our own land without disturbing labor conditions. There were those who thought that upon emancipation "a torrent of black emigration would set forth from the South to the North;" "one of the first results of its emigration South to the North;" "one of the first results of its emigration would be a depreciation in the price of labor. The added number of laborers would, of itself, occasion this fall of prices, but the limited wants of the negro, which enable him to underwork the white laborer, would tend still further to produce this result. The honest white poor of the North would therefore be either thrown out of employment entirely by the black, or forced to descend to an equality with the negro and work at his reduced prices."

None of these woes have vexed us. The negro can not be driven out of the South. He has as yet made no injurious competitive out of the South. He has as yet made no injurious competitive industrial development here, surrounded by vast natural resources, and the Filipino is 10,000 miles away. He is vastly the superior of the Filipino physically, and until the Philippines produce a Fred Douglass or a Booker T. Washington, he has nothing to fear in an intellectual comparison. The temporary inconvenience of internal-revenue laws seems to me vastly overestimated. Mere inconvenience can hardly determine a constitutional question.

Where is the bugbear? Is citizenship really "extremely serious?" If so, in what particular and how? The Foraker bill, when first reported from the committee, contained a provision ous?" If so, in what particular and how? The Foraker bill, when first reported from the committee, contained a provision making the inhabitants of Porto Rico "citizens of the United States." The committee did not seem to be impressed with the "serious" character of that act. They said in their report:

"The committee have seen fit, by the provisions of this bill, to make them citizens of the United States, not because of any supposed constitutional compulsion, but solely because, in the opinion of the committee, having due regard to the best interests of all concerned, it is deemed wise and safe to make such a provision."

Again:
"It was necessary to give these people some definite status.
They must be either citizens, aliens, or subjects. We have no subjects, and should not make aliens of our own. It followed that they should be made citizens, as the bill provides."

If for any reason the committee had thought it unwise or unafe, they might have withheld that quality. Apparently we now have "subjects." As to dangers, the court seems to have become possessed of light which was denied to the committee. The committee studied the practical conditions, and it seemed to them "wise and safe." What has happened to make it so "serious?" Should we not have a specification of the dangers that inhere in giving to "our own" the same civil rights under the Constitution that we possess?

the Constitution that we possess?
"The Diamond Rings" and Dooley et al. vs. The United States, while in the main controlled by the De Lima and Downes cases, require some further consideration.

THE DIAMOND RINGS CASE.

Emil J. Pepke brought with him from Luzon to this country some diamond rings, which he had purchased in Luzon, subsequent to the proclamation of the treaty of peace. The rings were seized and ordered forfeited for nonpayment of duties. This case was governed by the decision in De Lima v. Bidwell, unless distinguished by two considerations.

First. It was claimed that our possession of the Philippines was not complete; that, in effect, the duties were collected by virtue of the war power. As to this claim the court, in its opinion, said: "It is further contended that a distinction exists in that while complete possession of Porto Rico was taken by the United States, this was not so as to the Philippines, because of the armed resistance of the native inhabitants to a greater or less extent.

"We must decline to assume that the Government wishes thus

We findst definite to assume that the Government wishes thus to disparage the title of the United States or to place itself in the position of waging a war of conquest."

Second. It was insisted that a joint resolution, which passed the Senate after the ratification of the treaty, declaring that it was not intended by the ratification of the treaty to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippines into citizenship nor to annex permanently those islands, raised a distinction. The treaty had already been ratified, and it was not pretended that it was an attempt to amend it. Besides, it did not receive the necessary two-thirds vote on its passage, required for the ratification of a treaty. It clearly could not have the effect of law until passed by both branches and approved by the President. The legal status of the resolution is well stated by Mr. Justice Brown in his converge onlying when he serve. curring opinion, when he says:

To be efficacious, such resolution must be considered either (1) as an amendment to the treaty, or (2) as a legislative act qualifying or modifying the treaty. It is neither."

The wonder is that the Government felt required, even by the great exigencies of the case, to insist upon two distinctions so obviously without any legal foundation. The court held that the De Lima case controlled. The opinion was drawn by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, and the same justices concurred that concurred in the De Lima case. The same justices dissented that dissented in the De Lima case. It seems to have been intimated that the weight of the ruling in theDe Lima case was impaired by the fact that one of the concurring justices concurred in the judgment in the Downes case, and the Chief Justice explains the situation by the statement that the justice referred to "* * * was of opinion that although by the cession Porto Rico ceased to be a foreign country and became a Territory of the United States and domestic, yet that it was merely 'appurtenant' territory, and 'not a part of the United States within the revenue clauses of the Constitution.'"

But suppose the judgment in the De Lima case is "irreconcila-ble" with the opinions of the majority in the Downes case, as by many good lawyers it is believed to be, how are we arbitrarily to assume that it detracts from the weight of the ruling in the De Lima case and not from the weight of the ruling in the Downes case? If when the De Lima case is relied upon its weight is impaired because one of the judges who makes the bare majority of one has delivered an irreconcilable opinion in another case, why, by the same token, when the Downes case is relied upon is it not impeached because one of the justices who makes the majority of one has joined in an "irreconcilable" opinion in another case?

DOOLEY VS. THE UNITED STATES.

Dooley vs. The United States was an action to recover duties paid under protest at San Juan, P. R., on goods imported into that port from New York after the passage of the Foraker Act. The case was on all fours with the Downes case, unless the "tax or duty" paid was an export tax within the meaning of clause 5, section 9, of Article I of the Constitution, which provides that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

The opinion of the court was drawn by Mr. Justice Brown, and the same judges concurred and dissented in the Downes case. Mr. Justice White gave a concurring

The court held in the Downes case that Porto Rico had become "appurtenant" territory of the United States and was subject to the legislative authority of Congress, but "had not been so made a part of the United States as to cause Congress to be subject, in legislating with regard to that island, to the uniformity provision of the Constitution." The only question, then, was whether the term "export" related to foreign commerce alone, or whether it was as unlimited as by its terms it appeared to be, and related to was as unimited as by its terms it appeared to be, and related to both interstate and foreign commerce. Mr. Justice Brown drew the opinion of the court, and held that this prohibition of a tax on exports "applied only to goods exported to a foreign country." Mr. Justice White gave a concurring opinion, in which he held that "the import clause and the export clause are correlated and refer to a distinct subject; that is, to foreign commerce." He emphasizes his views and elaborates his reasoning on this point by saying:

"By what process of reasoning it can be said that because a special enumeration on a particular subject of taxation and a particular limitation as to that subject is expressed in the Constitution, therefore other and general powers of taxation not relating to the subject in question are taken away, is not by me perceived."

If the conclusion of the court is, that the only prohibition upon the power of Congress to levy a tax on exports to be found in the Constitution, relates only to foreign commerce and not to domestic, it would seem necessarily to follow that as to commerce between the States Congress is entirely unhampered by any constitutional provisions and can tax exports from one State to another at will, subject only to the provisions requiring uniformity and the prohibition against preferences. That this is the result is practically conceded by the court, though Mr. Justice

Brown shrinks from the conclusion. He says:

"It is not intended by this opinion to intimate that Congress may lay an export tax upon merchandise carried from one State to another. While this does not seem to be forbidden by the to another. While this does not seem to be forbidden by the express words of the Constitution, it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to lay such a tax without a violation of the first paragraph of Article I, section 8, that 'all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.'"

On the other hand, this conclusion not only does not seem to disturb Mr. Justice White, who gives a concurring opinion, but seems in fact to him necessary to the result. He says as one of his reasons for holding the term "export" confined to foreign commerce:

"Besides, it would follow that all the general powers of taxa-tion conferred upon Congress would be limited by the export clause, and thus any domestic tax, although fulfilling the requirements of uniformity, and not violating the prohibition against preferences which indirectly burdened the ultimate export, would be void, a doctrine which would manifestly cause to be invalid methods of taxation exercised by Congress from the beginning without question."

Again he says:
"Indeed when the argument which I am considering is properly analyzed it amounts to a denial, as I have said, of the substantial powers of Congress with regard to domestic taxation, and, as I understand it, overthrows the settled interpretation of the Constitution long since announced and consistently adhered to."

I am obliged to confess that I am not able readily to perceive the particular kind or method of taxation to which the learned justice refers as having been "exercised by Congress from the beginning without question," which would be no longer possible if Congress did not have the constitutional power to tax exports from State to State. I make no question that it is clear to the learned justice, but I do not think it as obvious as it appears to him to be.

The court rely upon Woodruff vs. Parham, supra, and Brown vs. Houston (114 U. S., 623) for this construction of the term "export." In both of these cases it is to be noted that the court were considering another and distinct clause of the Constitution, clause 2, section 10, of Article I, which reads:

"No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws."

In both cases the decision was expressly confined to that clause.

In Woodruff vs. Parham the court said:
"We are forced to the conclusion that no intention existed to prohibit by this clause (the clause referred to) the right of one State to tax articles brought into it from another."

And in Brown vs. Houston the court said:
"But in holding, with the decision in Woodruff vs. Parham, that goods carried from one State to another are not imports or exports within the meaning of the clause which prohibits a State from laying any impost or duty on imports or exports we do not mean to be understood as holding that a State may levy import or export duties on goods imported from or exported to another State. We only mean to say that the clause in question does not prohibit it?" These facts clearly appear from the able dissenting opinion of the learned Chief Justice.

I notice that in the opinion of the court and in the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice White, while both of these cases are cited, the fact that they both restrict their construction to this specific clause is not only not pointed out and emphasized, but that portion of the opinion in Brown vs. Houston is not even quoted, though its context appears in Mr. Justice White's opinion. The fact that the court in these two cases expressly confined the construction there adopted to that specific clause in the Constitution tends to indicate that the word "export" when used elsewhere in the Constitution, might well be susceptible of a broader meaning, and apply to domestic as well as to foreign commerce.

The court, in its opinion, cite with approval the following statement from the opinion in Woodruff vs. Parham:

"It is not too much to say that, so far as our research has extended, neither the word 'export,' import,' or 'impost' is to be found in the discussions on this subject, as they have come down to us from that time, in reference to any other than foreign commerce, without some special form of words to show that foreign commerce is not meant."

The last clause of this quotation, "without some special form of words to show that foreign commerce is not meant," is a trifle involved and of somewhat doubtful meaning. It is not quite certain whether it is meant that the "special form of words" applies to a case when the context, where the term "export" appears in the document under discussion, shows that foreign commerce is meant or that the discussion itself shows that "foreign commerce is not meant." The former is no doubt the true construction, as if the latter were adopted it would be equivalent to saying that in the original discussions the word "export," "import," or "impost" is not referred to as including domestic commerce—commerce between the States—unless it appears to have been so referred to, a construction which seems to me unwarranted.

In making this assertion, the court were evidently under the impression that in the "discussions on this subject, as they have come down to us from that time," the word "export," "import," or "imposts" was not used with "reference to any other than foreign commerce," and that when standing alone, without explanatory words that would qualify its meaning, it was not understood by the framers of the Constitution as having "reference to any other than foreign commerce." I submit that if their "research" had extended to the Madison debates they would not have had much difficulty in finding an instance where the word "import," which is conceded to be the correlative of "export, of itself standing alone, without qualifying words, was treated in the debate as including both foreign and domestic commerce. When Article XIII of the Report of the Committee of Detail, out of which grew the precise clause being considered in Woodruff vs. Parham, from which the foregoing quotation was made, provided that-

"No State, without the consent of the Legislature of the United States," shall, among other things, "lay imposts or duties on imports."

During the only discussion that took place upon this article "Mr. Madison moved that the words nor lay imposts or duties on imports' be transferred from article 13, where the consent of the General Legislature may license the acts, into article 12, which will make the prohibition on the States absolute."

In giving his reasons for the proposed change, "he observed that as the States interested in this power, by which they could tax the imports of their neighbors passing through their markets (here he was very clearly referring to 'other than foreign commerce'), were a majority, they could give the consent of the Legislature to the injury of New Jersey, North Carolina, etc." If the impression of the court in this particular was correct, he should have manifested his solicitude for "foreign countries" and not for "States," "neighbors," as "imports" in this clause, it is claimed, was never used with reference to "any other than foreign com-

In the discussion that ensued "Colonel Mason observed that particular States might wish to encourage, by impost duties, certain manufactures for which they enjoyed natural advantages, as Virginia the manufacture of hemp," etc., he evidently being clearly of the opinion that under the power to lay a duty on "imports" a State could protect itself against all competition, whether domestic or foreign, and especially against other States. Opposing the vesting of such a power in the States, even when subject to the consent of Congress, Madison insisted that "the encouragement of manufactures in that mode requires duties not only on imports directly from foreign countries, but from the other States in the Union, which would revive all the mischiefs experienced from the want of a general government over com-

include both interstate and foreign commerce. Commercial embarrassments caused by the diverse legislation of the various States was one of the prime causes that led to the formation of one nation under a Constitution. To leave the power to levy an import tax upon the products of other States unimpaired, save by a provision requiring the consent of the National Legislature, as it was then believed this provision did, would, in Madison's opinion, "revive all the mischiefs experienced from the want of a general government over commerce." The motion to transfer did not prevail. On the same day the words "or exports" were inserted after the words "imports," so as to prohibit the States from taxing either;" also after the word "exports" the words "nor with such consent but for the use of the United States." "Mr. Madison liked the motion, as preventing all State imposts, but lamented the complexity we were giving the commercial system." "Mr. Gouve-"Mr. Gouveneur Morris thought the regulation necessary to prevent the Atlantic States from endeavoring to tax the Western States." Mr. Clymer thought that "If the States have such different interests Clymer thought that "If the States have such different interests that they can not be left to regulate their own manufactures without encountering the interests of other States it is a proof that they are not fit to compose one nation." (Journal of Constitutional Convention, Scott, Forman & Co., 622–623.)

It was clearly assumed by all in this debate that the terms "imports and exports" included traffic between the States, and it

"imports and exports" included traffic between the States, and it was discussed almost wholly with reference to that feature. Instead of the "discussions on this subject as they have come down to us from that time" using these terms without "reference to any other than foreign commerce," they were on the contrary dominated by considerations involved in the idea that they were controlling in commerce between the States. The element of foreign commerce was merely incidental to the discussion. That the fathers understood "imports" and "exports" to include foreign and interstate commerce is clear, and the fact that the court in Woodruff vs. Partham had the contrary impression tends to de-Woodruff vs. Parham had the contrary impression tends to detract from the weight of a ruling based in part upon such impres-

It can hardly be said in the light of this debate that as to the framers of the Constitution, "no intention existed to prohibit by this clause the right of one State to tax articles brought into it from another," when it was opposed at its creation because its exercise "would revive all the mischiefs experienced from the want of a general government over commerce, and insisted upon because its exercise might prove desirable "to encourage" "cer-tain manufactures" as between the States.

The court and the dissenting justices both cite and rely upon the following reasoning which Mr. Justice Miller makes, in his opinion in Woodruff vs. Parham, in support of his conclusion that clause 1 of section 8 was confined as to customs duties to foreign commerce:

"Is the word 'impost,' here used, intended to confer upon Congress a distinct power to levy a tax upon all goods or merchandise carried from one State into another? Or is the power limited to duties on foreign imports? If the former be intended, then the power conferred is curiously rendered nugatory by the subsequent clause of the ninth section, which declares that no tax shall be laid on articles exported from any State, for no article can be imported from one State into another which is not at the same time exported from the former."

I think that it sustains the contention of the dissenting justices.

Clause 1 of section 8 provides that:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

The question then being discussed by Mr. Justice Miller was whether the "duties, imposts," thus authorized were to be levied "upon all goods or merchandise carried from one State into another," or upon "foreign imports" only. The "subsequent clause of the ninth section," to which he refers, is the one now under consideration: "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." (Clause 5, sec. 9, Art. I.)

not apply to "goods or merchandise carried from one State into another," but only to foreign commerce. But Mr. Justice Miller said, referring to clause 1, section 8:

"If the former be intended"—that is, the "power to levy a tax upon all goods or merchandise carried from one State into another"—"then the power is curiously rendered nugatory by the other "—"then the power is curiously rendered nugatory by the subsequent clause of the ninth section, which declares that no tax shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

section 8 did not apply to "merchandise carried from one State to section 8 did not apply to "merchandise carried from one State to another" by showing that it was inconsistent with a "subsequent clause," clause 5, section 9, which did apply to "merchandise carried from one State to another." "No article," he says, "can be imported from one State into another which is not at the same time exported from the former." Therefore the former clause can not be held to authorize a tax upon "imposts" from one State into another, because the latter clause expressly "declares that held held a constant from any State." If in no tax shall be laid on articles exported from any State." accordance with the conclusion of the court in the Dooley case, clause 5, section 9, has no application "to merchandise carried from one State to another," Mr. Justice Miller's demonstration falls to the ground. It is clear that Mr. Justice Miller took the same view of the latter clause as is maintained by the dissenting justices.

That is the principal demonstration upon which the case of Woodruff vs. Parham stands. That is the case upon which the majority rely. If reasoning necessary to their result takes the greater part of the foundation from under Woodruff vs. Parham, what have they left for authority to support them?

These considerations certainly tend to sustain the conclusions of the dissenting Justices, as ably expressed in the clear and luminous opinion of the Chief Justice. It is certainly worthy of consideration whether or not the conclusion of the majority of the Court, that there is no direct constitutional prohibition upon the power of Congress to tax exports between the States, does not tend to "revive all the mischiefs experienced from the want of a general government over commerce" and thus defeat one of the principal objects of the Union—unrestrained commercial equality. It also establishes a construction at variance with the intention of the builders

While a holding that the term "export" applies only to foreign commerce disposed of the Dooley case, the opinion suggests another view, which in the opinion of the court was another answer to the plaintiff's case, though this view was not referred to by Mr. Justice White in his concurring opinion. The court hold that being a tax upon "merchandise and articles going into Porto Rico from the United States," it is not an "export" duty, but an "import" duty, saying:

"Now, there can be no doubt whatever that if the legislative assembly of Porto Rico should, with the consent of Congress, lay a tax upon goods arriving from ports of the United States, such a tax, if legally imposed, would be a duty upon imports to Porto Rico and not upon exports from the United States, and we think the same result must follow if the duty be laid by Congress in the interests and for the benefit of Porto Rico."

Again:
"Now, while an import into one port almost necessarily involves a prior export from another [this proposition is characterized by all necessary caution, as it is impossible to conceive of a transit of goods with an end without a beginning], still in defining the character of the tax imposed, it is important to termining the character of the tax imposed, it is important to termining the character of the tax imposed, it is important to consider whether the duty be laid for the purpose of adding to the revenues of the country from which the export takes place or for the benefit of the territory into which they are imported."

Note the suggestion, "It is important to consider whether the duty be laid for the purpose of adding to the revenues of the country from which the export takes place." The Porto Rican act provides as to revenue, "The duties and taxes collected in Porto Rico in pursuance of this act, less the cost of collecting the same, and the gross amount of all collections and taxes in the same, and the gross amount of all collections and taxes in the United States upon articles of merchandise coming from Porto Rico, shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury, but shall be held as a separate fund," etc. As to this provision the court say:

The mere fact that the duty passes through the hands of the revenue officers of the United States is immaterial, in view of the requirement that it shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury, but be held as a separate fund for the government and benefit of Porto Rico."

Here we have a tax imposed by the authority of the United States, collected by the officers of the United States, in the main from citizens of the United States, some of it, at least, before Porto Rico had any legal existence, which when collected did not add "to the revenue of the" United States, did not, in fact, become the property of the United States, but added to the revenues and became the property of a nonexistent political entity, the Porto Rico that was to be. This applies to revenue collected at New York in the United States as well as to Porto Rico, pro hac vice out of the United States.

The treasury into which a fund goes determines the constitu-He evidently thought the two clauses were inconsistent with each other; but if neither of them related to or included "merchandise carried from one State into another," but both related only to foreign commerce, no inconsistency could arise. Mr. Justice Miller demonstrated to his satisfaction that clause 1 of for a time at least, not even in existence. These are some of the difficulties which confront us when we abandon the beaten path of difficulties which confront us when we abandon the beaten path of the Constitution. This new idea of the United States collecting taxes which do not become its property, a part of its "revenue," going into the only known place for its "revenue," its Treasury, has a redeeming feature. We have a provision of the Constitution—clause 7, section 8, Article I—which provides that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time." lished from time to time."

The great exigencies which now confront us have disclosed a The great exigencies which now confront us have disclosed a condition which makes that provision practically obsolete. There is nothing in the Porto Rican act in terms appropriating any money "from the Treasury." It now appears that was not necessary. That mere formality was made superfluous by simply preventing the money from going into the "Treasury." Never having been in the Treasury there is no occasion to go through the mummery of appropriating it "from the Treasury," as the court say:

the Treasury."

Hereafter when it is desired to avoid the perfunctory and outgrown process of an appropriation it will only be necessary to have a "requirement that it shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury." Inasmuch as money thus conveniently collected and held is not "public money," but the money of Porto Rico, the collecting officers are not embarrassed by the provisions requiring an account of "public money." We are not informed what would be the effect upon the liability of the sureties upon a collector's bond who was in default, not with the "public money" of the United States, against which defaults they had stipulated, but with Porto Rico's money, against which they had not stipubut with Porto Rico's money, against which they had not stipulated. Perhaps it has not been ciphered out so far as that, or as the theory has been that although the new dependencies had no rights theory has been that although the new dependencies had no rights or privileges by constitutional guaranties which we were bound to respect, yet they could rely upon us to see that they had all the rights and privileges that were, in our judgment, good for them and they were capable of enjoying. So with the collectors, while their bonds would not guarantee their honesty, Porto Rico need have no fear, as in their dealings with her they would be sure to deal honestly with her upon fundamental principles that underlie all law.

It can not be denied that if the reasoning of the court is sound, new avenues for the exercise of legislative ingenuity are opened up thereby. In their learned efforts to emasculate this provision prohibiting a tax upon exports, it seems to me that the court are fairly open to the pointed criticism of Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, in his dissenting opinion, when he says:

"The plain language of the Constitution should not be made 'blank paper by construction,' and its specific mandate ought to be obeyed."

He very pertinently says:
"Confessedly the prohibition applies to foreign commerce, and the question is whether it is confined to that; in other words, whether language which embraces all articles exported can be properly restricted to particular exports. On what grounds can the insertion in this comprehensive denial of power of the words to 'foreign countries,' thereby depriving it of its effect on commerce other than foreign, be justified?"

I believe Mr. Chief Justice Fuller to be correct when he says "such a conclusion is wholly inadmissible." Besides these, what seem to me insurmountable difficulties, involved in clause 5, this case stands or falls with the Downes case.

While I have not time to discuss that phase of the pending bill, I do not wish to be understood as assenting to it as a wise, fair, and judicious legislative measure. It treats the Philippines as a foreign country to which we are under no moral or commercial obligation. Instead of developing, it will retard their development. It tends to discourage rather than encourage; paralyze rather than energize their industries and their commerce. It reduces to a minimum every benefit that one could reasonably hope

Such are a few of the considerations tending to show that the profession and the country may not feel like unreservedly acquiescing in these decisions as final. The foundation upon which they rest is too insecure to guarantee permanence. The questions are entitled to further consideration—more mature deliberation. They reach the very vitals of our system. The industrial and commercial life of millions is subjected to the caprice of a legislature in which they have no voice.

Destruction is possible by taxation. Our own history discloses numerous instances where it has been successfully invoked for that purpose. These decisions leave the National Legislature absolutely unrestrained in the exercise of the taxing power over our new dependencies. It subjects the exercise of that power to all of the considerations of selfishness, avarice, jealousy, prejudice, and class hatreds that underlie the ebullitions of ephemeral popular excitement, which are too often reflected by the action of the lawmaking power.

While struggling in the throes of unjust and oppressive taxation this nation was born. It came into being as a protest against the exercise of despotic, irresponsible power. The restraint of its exercise of despotic, irresponsible power. The restraint of its Legislature by definite constitutional limitations was the chief corner stone of the Republic. This was the great characteristic that distinguished it from all governments that had preceded it. The fathers knew that thus, and only thus, could their handiwork be and forever remain what under God it was destined to be, "a government of laws and not of men." It never occurred to them that by the insidious process of legislative encroachment, supplemented by judicial amendment, it would be diverted from its lofty and divine purpose. They did not dream that it could be thus warped from the eternal foundations of liberty guaranteed by law by an itching for power, a thirst for glory.

by law by an itching for power, a thirst for glory.

If the exigencies of the future justified the vesting of an unlimited power in the Legislature, a way was provided therefor. The people who created the great charter of liberty were to amend it. This vital, fundamental power, involving the integrity of our institutions, was not delegated to their servants or agents. It institutions, was not delegated to their servants or agents. It was reserved to the sovereign people.

When this "fiftul fever" shall have subsided; when the vast, but as yet unappreciated and unknown responsibilities that have been assumed by us shall come crowding in upon and appall us; when we cease to "see through a glass darkly," then, I believe, we shall again realize and abide by the wisdom of the fathers. Then we shall appreciate the inestimable value of a constitution and an interpretation thereof that is "without variableness, neither shadow of turning." Then shall we turn to the eternal principles of equality in all things before the law as our very rock of refuge. Inasmuch as after every temporary disturbance rock of refuge. Inasmuch as after every temporary disturbance has subsided the needle always turns with unerring certainty to the pole, then will the greatest court in Christendom determine the law of the land in accordance with correct principles. With such an unerring guide and holy purpose the Republic will achieve its measurements. its splendid destiny, "conquering and to conquer," enlarging its borders, disseminating the blessings of its Christian civilization, enhancing its true grandeur, a giant among the nations of the earth, fulfilling the mission of Him who "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth."

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 28, 1901.

Hon. C. E. LITTLEFIELD, "Rockland, Me.

My Dear Sir: In reply to yours of the 22d instant, I can give you but little beyond the bare impressions left on my mind by events which occurred over thirty-seven years ago. I am just starting to Bar Harbor for the summer, and I am therefore unable to make the examination of Congressional records and other able to make the examination of Congressional records and other data necessary for a more satisfactory answer to your questions. The joint resolution to amend the Constitution abolishing slavery, which afterwards became the thirteenth amendment, was presented by me on January 11, 1864, and at once referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. The resolution as submitted consisted of two articles, the first of which was intended to abolish slavery throughout the United States, and the second was designed to facilitate or make less difficult the process of amending the Constitution. Constitution.

The first article as introduced by me was in these words: "Article I. Slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, shall not exist in the United States."

On the 10th of February following the committee, through its chairman, Mr. Trumbull, reported back the joint resolution, omitting entirely the second article and amending the first article to read as follows:

"SECTION I. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place sub-convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"Sec. II. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

My remembrance is that Mr. Trumbull, and possibly some other members of the Judiciary Committee, while the resolution was before them, indicated to me a desire or purpose to conform the language of the amendment as far as possible to that of the sixth article of the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory, which as you will remember is in the fol-Northwest Territory, which, as you will remember, is in the following words:

"ARTICLE VI. There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted."

As slavery was not supposed to exist at all in the Northwest Territory in 1787, the Congress of the Confederation used language not to abolish slavery, but to prevent its future introduction, to wit, "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude," That slavery existed as a matter of right or of law in the United States in 1864 was disputed by some members of Congress. But that it existed as a matter of fact was hardly to be disputed But that it existed as a matter of fact was hardly to be disputed by anybody. I assume that the Judiciary Committee recognized the actual existence of slavery, and their purpose was to use language proper to terminate its existence on the adoption of the amendment. The change in phraseology is slight, but indicative of the purpose. The language used is, "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude * * * shall exist within the United States," etc. In other words, as slavery did not exist in the Northwest Territory in 1787, it was enough to say "there shall be" none there in the future. But as slavery did exist in the United States in 1864, it was declared that, upon adoption of the amendment, it in 1864, it was declared that, upon adoption of the amendment, it should no longer exist.

In this desire to conform to the phraseology of the ordinance of 1787 it followed, of course, that the words "whereof the party shall have been duly convicted" were inserted. To this change I, of course, made no objection. If it introduced anything new into the amendment, the new matter was in no way objectionable. If it added nothing of substance to my original resolution, it detracted nothing, and possibly made it less liable to misinterpreta-While clearness of expression is desirable in the framing of laws, brevity is equally desirable, provided the language used comprehends the purpose sought. It never entered into my mind, however, that "punishment for crime," under our system of government, could be decreed by any authority other than the duly constituted tribunals of justice.

But the amendment to which you call my special attention is found in the words, "or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

After providing that "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist in the United States," you properly ask why it was thought necessary to add the words, "or any place subject to their jurisdiction." And in this connection you call my attention to the comments of Justices Brown and White of the Supreme Court in their late opinions in the Porto Rico cases.

The reasoning of these eminent judges is clearly defective, and the difficulties of construction suggested by them would have dis-appeared with a better knowledge of the history of the amendment and the peculiar circumstances attending its adoption.

Whatever else these words may refer to, they surely were not intended to embrace or refer to the Territories of the United States. If the eminent lawyers who composed the Judiciary Committee at that time had intended such a meaning, the term "Territory" or "Territories" would have been expressly used. It is the language of the original Constitution. "The Congress "Territory" or "Territories" would have been expressly used. It is the language of the original Constitution. "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the 'territory, or other property,' etc." The word "territory" had a clear and well-defined meaning before the Federal Constitution was framed. It was constantly used and well understood under the old confederation of States. The United States inherited "Territories," and the new government accepted the nomenclature attached to them as the convention had crystallized it in the Constitution. It is a term whose definition is as distinctive as any other term or phrase used in definition is as distinctive as any other term or phrase used in that instrument.

In providing for a capital or seat of government, the land to be acquired for that purpose was not called a "Territory." It was named a "district;" and that title inheres in all our laws. The sites to be obtained for "forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings were not designated as "territories." They were called "places." And as these places were to belong to the United States they would necessarily be "subject to their jurisdiction." And, in this connection, you will mark the fact that the Judiciary Committee in framing the constitutional amendment of 1864 used the word "place," the precise word already used in the Constitution to designate those districts or tracts of land, other than Territories, belonging to the United tracts of land, other than Territories, belonging to the United

In 1864, let it be remembered, the members of Congress who were called to act on this amendment were fresh from the work of laying taxes of every character—"taxes, duties, imposts and excises." The whole gamut of taxation, as known to the Constitution, was quite familiar to them all; and it was accepted by all that tax laws, by virtue of general enactment, applied to "Territories" as a large state. that tax laws, by virtue or general enactment, applied to reritories" as well as States. How could it be otherwise, when each member knew and properly respected the old and revered decision in the Loughborough-Blake case, which had long before defined the term "United States." That court, through its Chief Justice, had said: "It is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia, or the Territories west of the Missouri, is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania."

If we examine contemporaneous history, we find the nation involved at that time in a war of gigantic proportions—blockade runners hovering about our Southern coasts with privileges of shelter in the islands of the Gulf, and privateers despoiling our commerce, carrying commissions of the Confederate States, and carrying, too, the sympathy of European governments.

Among the officers of our Army and Navy the demand for naval and coaling stations outside the United States and nearer to the rendezvous of these enemies of our national success was not only general but urgent. The necessity for such stations was equally recognized by the statesmen of the period. So strong was this feeling that Admiral Meade, a short time after, assumed the aufeeling that Admiral Meade, a short time after, assumed the authority to contract with a Samoan chief for the harbor of Pago Pago; and General Grant, as President, with similar purpose, opened negotiations for island sites in the Gulf of Mexico. In contemplation of such stations, the language of the amendment becomes not only appropriate, but necessary. They might be obtained in slaveholding territory. If so, no compact in the covenants of purchase or lease should be allowed to perpetuate the institution. name of purchase or lease should be allowed to perpetuate the institution. In the language of the Constitution, as it then stood, such stations would not be designated as "Territories," but "places." And this latter word was the term naturally to be selected by such lawyers as Trumbull, of Illinois; Harris, of New York; Howard, of Michigan; Foster, of Connecticut, and Ten Eyck, of New Jersey.

I come now to another view of the subject, then fully realized and felt by all, but not openly discussed by any. I mean the everconstant fear that after all our sacrifices foreign intervention or other contingencies might compel either a final separation of the States or a peace on terms looking to the continuance of slavery in some of its forms. With the more pronounced antislavery men, especially those of the old abolition party, the fear of this latter contingency was more dreadful, if possible, than that of dissolution or permanent separation. Among these men there was want of confidence, more or less, in Mr. Lincoln himself. He had already said that he would favor whatever made for the Union. If the Union could be preserved by abolishing slavery, he would destroy slavery. If the Union could only be preserved by retaining slavery, he would accept the hard condition and save the Union. To statesmen like Mr. Sumner this was gall and wormwood. They were peculiarly alive to the possibilities of the future. The seceding States might be taken back with their original institu-tions untouched. If so, the old strife would continue. The roots of dissension would again grow into rebellion and war. These States might possibly be left in a confederacy to themselves, but in some way subject to a modified jurisdiction of the United States—such as the Balkan States under Turkey, such as the South African Republics under Great Britain, or Cuba under the Platt resolutions.

It was then universally conceded that if slavery could be once abolished by the constitutional provision it could not be revived by treaties of peace. The Constitution was then supposed to be superior to treaties and laws. The nation had not then outgrown its own organic law. A treaty in violation of the Constitution would have been denounced even by laymen as null and void.
The Republic, in its swelling pride of greatness, had not accepted the doctrine that the thing created may be greater than the creator, or that two or more departments of the Government might set aside the instrument under which they have their being. But if slavery were securely abolished by constitutional provision, it was believed that its continuance could not be accepted as a condition of peace.

When this amendment was drafted General Grant had not commenced the great campaign against Richmond (he had not even been selected for the work) and General Sherman had not reached Atlanta nor organized his march to the sea. No man not reached Atlanta nor organized his march to the sea. No man could prophesy the end. But whatever else might result, a majority of Union men had reached the hope and purpose that there should be an end of slavery. Perhaps to this intense desire, however crude and imperfect his phraseology, may be attributed the joint resolution of Mr. Sumner on this subject, introduced into the Senate on February 8, 1864, and afterwards pressed by him as a substitute for the committee's report. It provided as "Everywhere in the limits of the United States, and of each State and Territory thereof, all persons are equal before the law, so that no person can hold another as a slave.

If this resolution had become a part of the Constitution, those honorable judges who were puzzled by the language of the thirteenth amendment as it stands would have been led into inextricable confusion in an effort to account for the word "states" after the whole area of the United States had been provided for.

In view of the facts referred to, it is fair to presume the committee concluded that the words "United States" embraced all the States admitted into the Union and all the Territories belonging to the Government and that the phrase "any place subject to their jurisdiction" covered the District of Columbia, the forts, arsenals, dockyards, naval and coaling stations, together with any territory then within the seceded States over which any jurisdiction or authority might result from treaties of peace at the con-clusion of the then pending war.

Yours, very truly, J. B. HENDERSON.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I could have wished that the 10th of January had come and gone before a political discussion upon the various issues that have heretofore dominated political campaigns in this country should have come up in the House so that the controversy could have been settled so far as House so that the controversy could have been settled so far as the Democratic party was concerned, and that we might know the particular location and quality of the enemy in this battle. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thayer] has made what I presume he will label a free-trade speech. I have but very few words to say in regard to it, and I will point out a single item, simply to characterize all this array of statistical information that he has brought to the attention of the House. He states—and I suppose his appeal is being made to the good temperance people in the villages in the neighborhood of Worcester—that the American beer drinker is compelled to pay a vast sum in addition American beer drinker is compelled to pay a vast sum in addition per gallon for beer that he consumes as against the more privileged person in the Philippine Islands.

In point of fact, Mr. Chairman, the American beer drinker is taxed upon a barrel of 31 gallons of beer, all told, by the United States Government, $1.60, and under the provisions of this bill the Filipino, that we are trying to send the blessings of civilzation to, will be compelled to pay $3.60 per barrel of 26 gallons. There is a fair statement of the misinformation that has been conveyed by all the figures the gentleman has presented here. [Laughter.] It sounds terrible to the American consumer of beer that the American is compelled to pay double the price for his drink as compared with the Filipino; and it is made to appeal here to the conscience of the American people in opposition to the action of the Republican party in bringing in this bill; and yet see how easily his whole argument explodes, and with it goes the whole shock of that battle.

My friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has made a very good My friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has made a very good speech. If I had never heard any of those arguments before, I should have been greatly in danger of being seduced by his eloquence and plausibility and should have been driven to an examination of the ground work of his position. He has warned the Republican party that the American people will not stand any more of this class of legislation. Well, I remember when the battle of 1900 was coming on with what brotherly affection has warned the Republican party to keep class of what they were he warned the Republican party to keep clear of what they were He told us that the American people were just ready to rise up and destroy the Republican party; and that was the cry we heard from the other side of this House all the way through the early days of the summer of 1900.

There was not an issue of which the gentleman has spoken that There was not an issue of which the gentleman has spoken that was not argued out on this floor and presented to the people of the country in the most vigorous and most eloquent manner, on every stump from Maine to California; and in all the States of this Union where an election was held and popular voting was done, practically, the people of the country were unanimous in condemnation of the gentlemen on the other side, and practically unanimous in support of the position taken on this side. If it had not been for that, Mr. Chairman, I should have been afraid of the future. I tell you these prophetic declarations, made so eloquently and so earnestly, by men of such high character and such power of utterance, have a most damaging effect upon a person the first time he heave them. [Leophtor.]

of utterance, have a most tamaging enect upon a person the fitter time he hears them. [Laughter.]

Now let us go at this question fairly, and see what there is in it. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, my friend on the other side is faulty in that he has condemned the action of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, and has not provided or suggested a remedy. There is not any statesmanship in that sort of procedure. There is not any wisdom in assailing the position of the Republican party upon a great question like this, and suggesting no remedy for it. Would the gentleman from Virginia favor free trade with the Philippine Islands? Dare he go to the people of Virginia and say to them that he is in favor of putting the labor production of the ten millions in the Philippine Islands upon an exact equality in the markets of the United States with the products of his own people? Will he say that? Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The gentleman from Virginia does not appear to be in the Hall; but I will say for him that I do know he would give the Filipinos freedom.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, the gentleman has answered a question which were the same of the tion which was not asked. [Laughter.] I think that suggestion had better go to the committee on platform of the House Democrats to be worked out. [Laughter on the Republican side.] My question is this: Would the gentleman from Virginia think of putting tobacco of the Philippines, produced as it would be by the cheap labor of that country, on an exact equality in the markets of the United States with the production of the same article by higher labor of the American laborer? When he answers that question he will be talking about something that is at issue and not be talking about something that has passed away in the rear. When the original question arose in the House of Representatives, for here is where it did arise, the majority of the Republicans proclaimed their undying confidence in the proposition, first, that under no circumstances but the action of Congress, or that which was equivalent, the express terms of a treaty, did the provisions of the American Constitution go out to an acquired territory and give a condition of equality in administration and equality of citizenship to those acquired territories.

That was the issue, Mr. Chairman, that was fought out in 1860.

Never in my life was I more surprised than when I learned it was possible that any great leader of the Republican party in 1860 could in 1900 plant himself upon the now discarded doctrine of ex proprio vigore of the Constitution. I had lived in that memorable battle. I had before that time listened to the clarion voice of Thomas H. Benton, and I knew something of the great conflict of 1860, when Mr. Lincoln upon the platform denounced the whole doctrine that the Constitution of itself went out into the Territories and clothed the citizens of the Territories with the equality of American citizenship. I had heard all that and believed that the settlement in blood, the settlement of 1861 to 1865, was conclusive forever of that great question.

But we had it all over again. How did it come up, where did it come from, and in what way? On the floor of this House more than once within the last year we were told on this side that it was the Democratic party that drove us into war with Spain.

I think my friend from Missouri [Mr. Clark] has used some language perhaps a little less elegant than mine. I think he has mentioned the particular part of the anatomy of the Republican party that the Democratic party seized when it carried us into the war with Spain.

That is all over, and history has been in part written. We may as well admit that the Republican Administration of that day was opposed to a war with Spain, and did have on this floor a great body of men who stood with the Administration, opposed to a hasty declaration of war. And the same thoughtless cry that we hear to-day about the liberty of the Filipino rung through this Chamber from the other side of the House then applied to Cuba, and I believe that had it not been for the accident of the explosion of the Maine we would never have had a war with Spain, and all the results that followed would have been worked out except the responsibility of the Philippine acquisition.

But the sinking of the Maine took place, the war came, and we all stood together. I wish that the time was now when those of our friends on the other side would stand as loyally to-day with us in trying to bear the burdens that come to us from that war with Spain as they were in diving a sink the second to the company. with Spain as they were in driving us into the war with Spain.

with Spain as they were in driving us into the war with Spain. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is not the greatest possible development of patriotism that you tried to bring about this war, and insisted upon it for some purpose which I do not know—I will not assign to you any sinister motive—and then after the war has come you have offered no suggestion as to how we may be relieved from these troubles, but you come here and aggravate the condition and annoy the people of the country by an array of preposterous figures, attempting to illustrate a great condition of financial loss to the people of the country. people of the country.

I congratulate my young friend from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] that in his desperation—I do not mean mental desperation, but political desperation, which comes without any mental action [laughter]—that he has now finally planted himself upon the position that the acquisition of the Philippine Islands has not, up to this time, been a profitable investment; and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thayer] looks away forward through the dim vista of a lot of figures that are misleading as to all that they pretend to disclose and sees trouble away off in the future they pretend to disclose and sees trouble away off in the future, all based on the question of dollars and cents.

Well, we have got a good many States in the Union that are not very profitable. Suppose I should stand here on the floor and take up the receipts of the General Government from some of the States of the Union and figure out the expense that the General Government is put to by the present union of States and the obli-gations placed upon the Federal Government by the Constitution. I think we would find out that we have got more than the Philip-pine Islands that are not very profitable. Governments, administrations, constitutions, laws, are not framed or based upon the question of 2 per cent, 3 per cent, or 4 per cent, but they are based upon something higher and greater and better, and that is the greater question of the administration of the Government, charged with a duty to all the people, a Government anxious and willing, even at the expense of the loss of money, to do its duty toward all that depend upon it. [Applause.]

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. I am aware that the gentleman from Ohio would not want to put me in a false position before the House, and I am sure he does not want to put himself in one. He says that I misstated the tariff upon beer in the Philippine Islands. If the gentleman will look on page 39 of the Philippine tariff, imor the gentleman will look on page 39 of the Philippine tariif, imposed by the Philippine Commission, at No. 312, he will find that he is laboring under a mistake. The tariff upon beer is $3.40, on malt liquor, malt extract, and cider in casks, per hectoliter. Upon malt liquor, malt extract, and cider in bottles it is $4.60 per hectoliter. A hectoliter is 100 liters, and that makes about two barrels and a half. The duty on whisky is 35 cents per liter, and a liter is equal to about our quart. The gentleman from Ohio has been laboring under the delusion that a harrel was the Ohio has been laboring under the delusion that a barrel was the equivalent to a hectoliter.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman himself is laboring under the mistake which lies at the root of his whole figuring. A hectoliter is 30 gallons, not 26 gallons.

Mr. THAYER. A hundred liters are over two barrels and a half.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I shall not use up my time in figuring This whole question was carefully worked out up this matter. in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I am not mistaken when I say to the gentleman that the taxes of the Government upon an English barrel of beer delivered in the Philippine Islands, ex freight, are less than half what the tax is on the same quantity delivered to the retailer in Washington.

Mr. THAYER. Let me ask the gentleman how he reconciles that with the statement he has already made? The Philippine that with the statement he has already made? The Philippine tariff provides a duty of $3.20 on a hectoliter of beer. The Dingley tariff places a duty of 20 cents on a gallon. (Sec. 298.) Three dollars and twenty cents for 30 gallons, as the gentleman says, would be about 13 cents on a gallon, or about half as much as the Dingley tariff bill exacts here.

Mr. GRÖSVENOR. I mean—
Mr. THAYER. The English barrel must be much larger than a horshead.

hogshead

Mr. GROSVENOR. I leave the gentleman to wrestle in the mazes of his own statement.

Mr. PARKER. Allow me a brief explanation by way of cor-

Mr. PARKER. Allow me a brief explanation by way of correction. The gentleman from Massachusetts has mistaken a quart for a gallon. A hundred quarts are only 25 gallons.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is a fraction of a little over a quart; in a liter there are five one-hundredths of another quart—exactly 26 gallons. This is the precise fact; and a barrel of beer is 31½ gallons. My friend is wholly ignorant upon the subject of intoxicating liquors. [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. I concede that I am not so well acquainted with the subject as the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I will not pursue the question of the profits that have grown out of the Philippine acquisition. It came to us as a result of a patriotic war, in which all parties agreed, and for the prosecution of which all parties joined. And if there is any greater responsibility resting on any one party of the country than on another, it rests upon our Democratic friends. When the war is over we find gentlemen undertaking to figure on this question, and I think I can show my friend taking to figure on this question, and I think I can show my friend from Massachusetts that he is worse off on some of his other fig-ures than on those in regard to beer. And this is a subject which comes especially under his general knowledge, though on the other subject I will admit he is a novice.

As I understood him, he stated that our trade—I am now on the question whether this Philippine business is going to pay or not; and in this connection let me say that if I firmly believed that all the gentleman from Virginia said about the Philippine Islands would ever come true, I should say that the best investment this country ever made was when it got possession of those islands. Mr. Chairman, did you hear that eloquent outburst when he said that if we did certain things that the Democratic party would do if it had the power—he did not tell us what they were—there would come a time very shortly when peace would spread her wings all over that archipelago, and we could raise 100,000 soldiers over there to go to war with some of the Oriental nations. I never looked at the matter in that light. If we could get the benefit of some of those people to act as policemen, it is as much as I hoped for until the dawning of a semipolitical millennium shall come.

The gentleman says that the trade of the Philippines is very small, which is a fact, and that Great Britain is getting far more than her share of it, which is quite a mistake, as I will show the gentleman. He has gone into the year 1899, as I recollect, and the year 1900, as I know, and as far as he could into the present year. Of course, all of us are sometimes misled by figures which are published in the newspapers, and I fear that the gentleman has been misled by his own construction of some of the reports.

ter, trade which has gone from Hongkong, a British port, a free port, has been reported at the port of delivery, Manila, as British trade.

A Member. Hongkong trade.
Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the same thing. I will show the gentleman that of that trade coming to the archipelago from Hongkong the Department here, from the best information it can get, shows that not more than 25 per cent thus called British trade ought to be reckoned as British trade; but, on the contrary, a great amount of it should go to the credit of the United States and about an equal quantity to China. I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a letter from the honorable Secretary of War which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has received to day. to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 12, 1901.

SIR: In addition to the memoranda and documents already furnished your committee relative to the present Philippine tariff and the customs revenues of the Philippine Islands, I have the honor to inclose herewith extract from the last report made to the Secretary of War by the Philippine Commission. This report covers the period from November 30, 1900, the date of the former report, to include October 15 of this year, and has been sent to the Public Printer for publication.

Your attention is specially invited to the statement of the Commission that under the rules and administration of the old tariff it was difficult to determine the country of origin of importations into the islands, and therefore that Hongkong, the free port, headed the list in 1898, 1899, and 1900, but mainly because of the fact that under the rules then existing a large quantity of merchandise from the United States, England, and the Chinese Empire, amounting to, probably, 70 per cent of the total imports, was credited to Hongkong, having been shipped to Philippine ports from and invoiced there.

The collector states that this merchandise should have been credited to other countries, approximately as follows:

Per cent England

England Chinese Empire.

The United States, therefore, should be accordingly credited with an approximate total of imports of merchandise during the fiscal year of $3,440,831, which, compared with the annual average under Spanish control, $130,662, shows a gratifying increase.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

n. SERENO E. PAYNE, Chairman Committee on Ways and Means, United States House of Representatives.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it will thus be seen how easy it is to misunderstand conditions when one is trying to place easy it is to misunderstand conditions when one is trying to place himself in the attitude of a critic rather than in the attitude of a supporter of the Government. I wish to make this matter just a little plainer, although it may be useless to do so. The port of Hongkong is a free port. At that port exports from this country intended to be imports into the Philippine Islands may be landed, warehoused, and shipped into the ports of the archipelago at a time when the market is in a condition to receive them proposite and the greatern houses in the archipelago will be conveiled. erly, and the custom-houses in the archipelago will be compelled to indicate that those shipments came from the free port of Hongkong.

Now, I do not undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Philip-pine trade has become magnificent. But let us see how the gentleman from Virginia stands. We are proposing to put a modified duty upon the imports that go into those islands, and that enactment of Congress will carry with it the right of Spain also to import to the Philippine Islands under the same terms and conditions that we do from this country.

The gentleman shows that the purchasing power of those islands is a very small power—nothing like the trade of one of our smaller.

Southern ports; and yet he tells us that great wrong is being done, that a crushing weight is being put upon those people that are importing almost nothing from this country, and are paying this small amount of duty—for what purpose? Why, Mr. Chairman, small amount of duty—for what purpose? Why, Mr. Chairman, we stood here less than fifteen months ago proposing to put a tariff of 15 per cent of the Dingley bill duties upon the Porto Rican imports; and our friends on the other hand cried out in the same way as they now do. They said it was one of the most cruel of all the cruel things ever done to a country. And yet to-day I venture to say that in all the administration of colonial governments by England, or America, or any other civilized country on earth, no such generosity was ever manifested toward a dependent country, and no such results ever grew out of a sys-tem of taxation like that.

Then, Mr. Chairman, there was not a schoolboy or a schoolgirl in the island of Porto Rico; there was not a schoolhouse in that island. To-day there are 30,000 children going to school there, all learning to read; and better than that, they are all learning to read the English language; and shortly they will be able to read and understand the difference between a party that holds on to the coat-tails of the world and halloos "Whoa!" at every step of progress and a party that is able to go forward and do something for a dependent country like that. [Applause.]

Then there were no roads. Now there are roads all over the land. Then there were no churches. Now there are churches. island. Then there were no churches. Now there are churches. Then there were no such things as newspapers or enlightened progress among the people. To-day, if the people of Porto Rico were polled, there would not be 10 per cent of them who would say that this country had been unjust or that evil had come to them by Republican legislation. If there is one act of my life of which I am proud to-day, and of which I believe I shall be proud to the end, it is that I stood here amidst the storm that raged around us and voted for the collection of that money and its application to the purposes to which it has been applied.

application to the purposes to which it has been applied.

What are we doing now? The Philippine question is on a much larger scale. In the Philippines they have no roads, they have no bridges, they have no schoolhouses. Their great harbor, that can be made equal to one of the great harbors of this country, needs dredging. Where is the money to come from?

be made equal to one of the great narrors of this country, needs dredging. Where is the money to come from?

I want to leave behind me another question to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. Are you willing that this Government shall falter in its duty to the Philippines, shall cease to build roads, cease to dredge the harbors, cease to try to cure the tendency to malarious and infectious diseases, cease to try to educate the people, draw away from them all the efforts of civilization which we have thus been generously extending to them? Are you willing to do that? If not—and I know you are not; I know you can not answer that question in the affirmative—then Are you willing to do that? If not—and I know you are not; I know you can not answer that question in the affirmative—then where is the money to come from? Will you gentlemen come forward with a proposition and tell us whether or not you are willing to raise the money in this indirect way, proportioned upon the amount of necessities that the people over there have, or whether you are willing to put your hands down into the pockets of the people of the United States and take out their money and send it over to discharge the duty which you are to the people of send it over to discharge the duty which you owe to the people of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.
Mr. DE ARMOND. I should like to know what opportunity has been given, or what opportunity will be given, to bring forward any other plan than your plan?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, well, bringing forward is not what I am talking about.

am talking about.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, I am asking the gentleman a question, and he does not seem to understand it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose the gentleman means that there will be no opportunity to amend this bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I mean that there is no opportunity to amend this bill or to have considered any other bill or to have fair or reasonable consideration of this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There has been no other bill than this in-

Mr. GROSVENOR. There has been no other bill than this introduced.

Mr. DE ARMOND. There is no opportunity for the consideration of amendments, there is no opportunity for the bringing forward of any proposition, or for the reasonable consideration of forward of any proposition, or for the reasonable consideration of this proposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My friend has just returned from the Philippines, and, thank God, at last he got on a ship that brought him safely over, so that we have not lost the benefit of his wisdom, and we have not lost those acute attacks that he makes so often, just in exactly the form in which he has made this one. Now let me answer him. There is attached to this House of Representatives a Committee on Ways and Means. There is a rule of this House that permitted the gentleman from Missouri, or any other centleman on the other side, to have introduced a bill and other gentleman on the other side, to have introduced a bill and have it sent to that committee, to supply all these urgent demands nave it sent to that committee, to supply all these argent demands of the people of the islands.

Mr. DE ARMOND rose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Wait a moment. If no one saw fit to give the necessary labor, if no one possessed the necessary enterprise, then there was an opportunity, there must have been an opportunity, for at least a suggestion of a change in the bill in the committee itself. And failing in all that, the gentleman can draw up his own proposition now and ask unanimous consent of draw up his own proposition now and ask unanimous consent of the House to be allowed to offer it as an amendment; and failing in that, as I can tell him now he will [laughter], he can then move to recommit this bill with instructions to report back his substitute, and no man can prevent his making that motion. The gentleman has just come from the Philippine Islands, and I would be delighted to see the measure of statesmanship that he will bring to bear upon a transaction of this character.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman certainly has suggested a most generous opportunity— Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I can not yield further. My time is going so rapidly.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understood the gentleman to be asking me a question, and I supposed he wanted an answer.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has asked me a pertinent question, and I flatter myself I have fully answered it. [Laughter.] At all events, I am entirely content with my answer, and I hope the gentleman is also.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he is easily flattered. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, my friend was an easy mark in that particular.

that particular.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would suggest that the gentleman from Ohio ought not to aim at any other sort of a mark. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no occasion for it. If we under-

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no occasion for it. If we undertook to shoot at some of the marks that we see in this House, we should need to have a gun that would shoot in half a dozen different directions at once. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. That does not answer the question.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?
Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I can not. I have been very consid-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.
Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me go forward. The gentleman from Virginia, I think, saw the force of the argument that he thought would be made on this side, and he turns around upon somebody on the other side of the House and says that we are going to put the sugar and tobacco of Cuba on the free list, or that we are going to reduce the tariff to such an extent as to injure and damgoing to reduce the tariff to such an extent as to injure and damage the American producers. Now, this is a breath that he drew almost instantaneously after he had denounced the putting of any tariff on the Philippine Islands. Yet we acquired the Philippine Islands with an express provision, a distinct stipulation that, as construed by the Supreme Court, gives us ample authority. It does exactly what we are trying to do here.

Then, upon the other hand, the gentleman turns around and he says that we have got reciprocity treaties, and he tells who with, and he tells us that this reciprocity involves the free importation of goods from England and from Jamaica and from the West Indies, from the South American Republics, from France, and so on.

He says we have got reciprocity; he says there are the reciprocity treaties. Where are the reciprocity treaties? I have not heard of reciprocity except in the few words of the President of the United States in his recent message to Congress; and I think I can quote what he said of these reciprocity treaties. He must be a magician, he must have power equal to a magician, if he could by the words which I will quote make reciprocity treaties with those records that the continual form Virginia says we have got these people that the gentleman from Virginia says we have got these reciprocity treaties with. He says:

I transmit to Congress certain reciprocity treaties hitherto sent to Congress by my predecessor.

It must be a very powerful thing to make a reciprocity treaty at way. We read in the Constitution, first, that the President of that way. We read in the Constitution, first, that the President of the United States must make a treaty, and he did not say he made it; and it reads, second, that the Senate—and in this case Congress—shall ratify the treaties. When the time comes for the consideration of these reciprocity treaties I have an idea that the Republican party will be equal to the occasion. I have an idea that the gentleman from Virginia will be just as anxious for us to consider these reciprocity treaties as he is to consider this bill, and he will be just as indefinite about his view as to what should be done as he is indefinite about what should be done in this Philbe done as he is indefinite about what should be done in this Philippine Archipelago.

The Republican party of this country stands in a pretty solid form. The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken if he thinks there is an awful cry for tariff revision. If it was not so old a story I would tell the story of General Grant's experiences on his first night out on the plains. But as it is an old story, I will simply remind him that the cry of the free trader, the shriek of the tariff revisioner, the outcry of the man who wants to do away with rectaction by the instrumentality of reciprocity, is making with protection by the instrumentality of reciprocity, is making about the same noise in proportion to his number as the coyote was that disturbed the rest of Grant on his first night on the plains out West. [Laughter and applause.] There will be time enough to consider reciprocity then—

Mr. THAYER. I would ask the gentleman if he has forgotten President McKinley's last speech?

Mr. CROCKENOR. I have the continue will

President McKinley's last speech?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not. I hope the gentleman will take that speech and read it and act upon it, and he will rise in the market ninety-odd per cent. There is no trouble about that. We will wait until the issue comes here. I was coming up to the question of Cuba. What has this question to do with our future action in the matter of Cuba? I think the gentleman from Virginia is either trying to make a play in anticipation of the question of reciprocity or else he is talking merely idly, and I know he will never do that. What has the question of the future of our relations with Cuba to do with the Philippine Islands?

Cuba is to all intents and purposes a foreign country. It has been so held by the Supreme Court and so treated by all the departments of the Government. What we may do with Cuba will be a question of reciprocity; what we do with the Philippines is not reciprocity, but is simply a question of what is the right thing for our Government to do with its own dependency under the free open hand that the Supreme Court says we have in the situation. It will be time enough to discuss the question of Cuban reciprocity when there is a Cuban government, an authority upon the island of Cuba to come up here and propose it to us; and when that time comes I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts he need give himself no anxiety. The Republican party has built up a magnificent bulwark of prosperity out of the ruins of Democratic free trade; and it will never, under the guise of reciprocity or concession of any kind, tear down one of the great industries that it has built up, in the interest of another. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

We hear about reciprocity and we hear about high tariff. Why, I might refer to the fact that in the last campaign in Ohio our Democratic friends thought, when there was a stillness, a deadness, and an uncertainty in the country, and hope had taken possession of their hearts that there was a division of sentiment on the Republican side, had the temerity to make the mistake of putting a proposition into their platform in favor of a tariff for reveamong the laboring communities of the State and talking of the tariff. He declared that the Dingley bill was "legalized robbery." The effect of it I think you gentlemen heard something about the morning often the election. We will take eye of that morning after the election. We will take care of that.

The question here is the present one. I want to speak about a matter introduced in this bill, and out of the line covered by the gentleman who opened the debate upon our side. We have got in this bill a proposition suspending in effect the coastwise laws of the United States as affecting trade between the United States and the Philippines during a period not named in the bill, but which is to be settled hereafter by such method as Congress may see The reason for that is not that the Republican majority fit to use. on this floor has any disposition to repeal the coastwise legisla-tion now upon the statute books of the United States; it is not that we are willing to strike any blow against that magnificent organization of shipping interests, but it has come to us through official channels that under the decision of the Supreme Court, which applies the coastwise laws of the country to shipping be-tween ports of the United States and the port of Manila, that foreign ships are thereby excluded, and no American ships are at hand to do the business offering, so that every foreign ship is driven out of the trade.

It was represented to the committee that the result is such as to produce the temporary cessation of shipment; that there was not enough coastwise ships upon the Pacific side of the country to carry the products that were waiting to go to the Philippine Islands. I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that it was represented to us that the trade—the export trade—from the United States to the Philippine Islands direct, and from the Philippine Islands, possibly, by way of dis-tribution to other countries, was gaining so rapidly in bulk that it was necessary, in order to get rid of this congestion, that some relief should be granted; and so we have put into this bill a measure of temporary relief, not to stand for all time, not to strike down the navigation laws of the country, but simply to give necessary relief to the congested commerce upon the Pacific coast.

I have learned since this measure was agreed upon in committee that it may be more than likely we were in error in regard to tee that it may be more than likely we were in error in regard to our facts, and that our coastwise vessels will very shortly, possibly before the close of the session, change so that this tentative provision will not be necessary, and it can be stricken out in the Senate. But, unless something of that kind is agreed upon, it has been deemed wise to practically suspend the operation of the coastwise legislation for such time as may be necessary to relieve the condition of things now existing. I refer to this not only as explanatory of the section of the bill which we have brought, but also as indicative of the growth of our trade in the Phillipping also as indicative of the growth of our trade in the Philippine Islands.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we owe something to these people. We have taken them out of the hands of Spain. We have lifted from their shoulders the burdens which they have borne for so long and which were so heavy that they had become intolerable and had ingrafted into the very nature of the inhabitants of these islands the disposition which unfits them, for the time being, to become citizens of the United States.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thayer] talks about giving them free government. Why, they have a degree of civil government in their own right in the Philippine Islands to-day greater by more than five times than they have had in all their history under the domination of Spain. Just as rapidly as they will assimilate free government, local self-government, it has been extended to them. If I would criticise anything in connection with the administration of the affairs of the Philippine Islands, I would say that under this demand that is constantly going up, this mere agitation of the question, unintelligent agitation of the question, our Government has gone further along the road than I think has been necessary; further than I they should have gone up to this time. That the Government of the United States has more than made it manifest that they of the United States has more than made it manifest that they would meet the people of these islands halfway, two-thirds of the way, almost the whole way, in local self-government, no man

When will it end? I do not know. When will the other responsibilities of our Government end? Was there ever a time when the responsibilities resting upon any great government came to an end so that there was no longer a duty to perform? came to an end so that there was no longer a duty to perform? There is a duty to perform, and, thank God, the people of the United States are willing to perform it. [Applause.] Did the gentleman ever address an audience in all that great campaign of 1900 attempting to appeal to the people against the ownership and possession and occupation of the Philippine Islands, and did he ever get a response in favor of such a suggestion? If he ever did, he got it from somebody who can trace his lineage back to some of the ancient periods of our history when there was more than one party to a great question in which the people were interested, and one of the parties was not a patriotic party. We are ested, and one of the parties was not a patriotic party. We are more than ready to execute all the promises and suggestions we ever made to these people.

What is there in the conduct of the present Administration that leads men to doubt? This very tariff bill that the gentleman has assaulted with such vigor and eloquence was not made by Republicans alone. Who was it that was largely instrumental, equally instrumental with anybody else, in making that tariff? It was the distinguished and honored Democrat from the State of Tennessee, one of the Commission who gave this Government the best efforts of his life in order that he might cooperate with Judge Taft in the administration of the semimilitary government of the Philippine Islands. He gave his genius and his patriotism to the construction of this bill. It is a tentative measure. We do not know what it will produce. There are no figures to tell. Gentlemen on the other side are no more enlightened in this matter than we are. It went into effect on the 15th of November and we know nothing about the effects of the administration of the bill, but we do know that the nonpartisan committee, composed of such men as Governor Taft, of Ohio, and Mr. Wright, of Tennes-see, made and framed this administrative act.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Ohio know that Luke E. Wright, in the last Presidential election in which he voted—in 1896—voted the Republican ticket? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Good for him. That is what comes from associating with great men in great enterprises. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Mr. Chairman, he was not the only man. He was only one of the hundreds of thousands, and if our friends do not get together pretty soon and frame some sort of a plat-form upon which they can all stand and reassemble their shattered elements, there will be nothing left of them in two years

Mr. PIERCE. I merely wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that General Wright is not a Democrat, but a Republican.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I supposed he was a Democrat.

Mr. PIERCE. No; when a man votes the straight Republican ticket, he is supposed to be a Republican.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not always.

Mr. PIERCE. That is the way it looks to us down in Tennessee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the way it looks to you down in Tennessee, but how do they look at it in New York and Pennsylvania and up in the great West? [Laughter on the Republican side.] If I were my friend, I would not open up that question, but I would sit on the safety valve and hold it down. [Great laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PIERCE. I will say to the gentleman that whenever a man votes the Republican ticket they say that he is a Republican.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I will make a prediction for you. In 1904 the chances are that, stripped of populism, abandoned by the Silver Republicans, the old Democratic party, weather-beaten, but still honorable, badly disfigured, but still in the ring [laughter], will be moving forward under the guidance and control of ter], will be moving forward under the guidance and control of the men who stood where Luke Wright stood a year ago last fall. Mr. PIERCE. Then they will be voting the Republican ticket. Mr. GROSVENOR. I think they will. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, there is every hope of the future for the Philippine Islands. The head of the Government, the administration of affairs here to-day, the President of the United States, took hold of the campaign of 1900 with a will, with hearty cooperation in the great march the Republican party made in that memorable contest. He indorsed the platform and grandly defended it. He stands with a free hand and a clear head and a brave heart to uphold the banner that Republicanism has lifted up, as administration of the formula of the fo trator of the great purposes of the party in the future. I have hope for my country; I have hope for her acquisitions. I have faith in the administration of the Republican party, and confidence in the approval of the people. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SHAFROTH obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAF-portal is recognized for thirty minutes.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is ROTH] is recognized for thirty minutes

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, it is with a feeling of sadness Mr. Sharkwith. Mr. Chairman, it is with a feeling of sadness that I behold men whom I know to be honest, intelligent, and patriotic who can not see in this measure anything more than a matter of revenue or of tariff rates and schedules. To my mind, there underlies this proposition a violation of the very cardinal principles of our Declaration of Independence and of the moral law itself.

Sir, it is a peculiar coincidence that in the establishment of the colonial empire of our country the first revenue tax to be imposed by an American Congress upon the Philippine people is identical in principle and more burdensome in terms than that which was imposed by Great Britain upon her thirteen colonies.

It was Burke, Chatham, and other great statesmen of the Brit-ish Empire who then denounced that tax as unjust and oppressive. It was a united people upon this side of the waters who saw in the measure a death blow to liberty itself and who preferred to die rather than submit to such tyranny.

The pending measure is still more reprehensible than that of England in view of the fact that Great Britain was a monarchy, which of itself indorses the right of some people to govern others, while we are a republic, founded upon the broad doctrine that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed.

PROVISIONS OF PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. Chairman, this bill recognizes the Philippine Islands as Mr. Chairman, this bill recognizes the Philippine Islands as American territory, and then proposes to impose the same duties upon products and goods shipped therefrom to our shores as if they were a foreign country. The object of a protective tariff is to prevent foreign goods and products from competing with our own. All of the States of the Union except the original thirteen have been Territories. Let the people of these States transport themselves to the Territorial days and ask themselves how they would have liked the United States Congress, elected from the States, to have crippled the infant industries of their Territories by the imposition of duties upon their products and goods when shipped to the States. Sir, they would have denounced it as one of the most diabolical acts of tyranny and oppression that had ever been perpetrated. ever been perpetrated.

Is it any less a diabolical act because the islands are inhabited by a poorer, more ignorant, and more defenseless people, who have to transport their goods and products 7,000 miles farther in order to reach the markets of their own country?

We have taken from the Philippine people the open markets of Spain and are substituting the almost prohibitive duties of the Dingley tariff. How can the islands be developed under such legislation?

The bill further provides that the tariff rates fixed by the Philippine Commission, which was appointed by the President of the United States, shall be the duties to be paid upon products and goods imported into the islands from the United States.

Thus our Government not only fixes the duties so as to prevent products of the Philippines coming to our shores, but also exercises the power of imposing duties which facilitate our exportations to the islands. Thus we use them for our own purpose to extend our trade and to diminish theirs.

In fastening upon these islands the tariff rates fixed by the Philippine Commission, we sanction something which our Constitution expressly prohibits the nation from doing as to the States, namely, the imposing of export duties. The crippling of industries by export duties was considered by the framers of our Constitution. stitution as so serious a matter that they would not even leave the power in Congress to enact such legislation.

The Philippine Commission's tariff schedule imposes export duties upon the staple products of those islands, namely, hemp, indigo, rice, sugar, cocoanuts, and tobacco.

Thus we make the Philippine people pay double duty on their staple products when shipped to this country. Yea, more, we deny to the people of those islands even the privilege of making favorable trade, relations with the foreign countries of the favorable trade relations with the foreign countries of the world.

It is true that the bill provides that the duties collected shall go to the government established by the Philippine Commission, just as the act of Parliament of Great Britain imposing duties upon goods shipped to the thirteen colonies provided that the revenue derived therefrom should be expended in America for its protection and defense.

It is a well-recognized legal maxim, however, that one must be just before he can be generous. All the charity of the world would not compensate us for injustice, and it will not compensate any other people whose sense of right is worthy of respect. I venture the assertion that there is not an American, European, or Filipino in the islands, other than an officeholder and his de-pendents, who sanctions this measure.

What a travesty on benevolence to impose such duties upon the staple products of these people as will restrict and in a large measure prevent exportation to our shores and then offer to turn over the paltry sums collected from such hampered commerce to a government imposed upon them without their consent. Benjamin Harrison has well said:

The man whose protection from wrong rests wholly upon the benevolence of another man or of a Congress is a slave—a man without rights.

The title of this bill contains something which shows that the

The title of this bill contains something which shows that the framer himself was even ashamed of the measure. It reads as follows: "A bill temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

It is a well recognized principle of statutory construction that the title is no part of an act. There is not a single word in this bill which attempts to make its provisions temporary or in any way limit the operation thereof. If it is a temporary measure, why not limit its duration to two five or even ton years? So far why not limit its duration to two, five, or even ten years? So far as this bill is concerned, it is as permanent a measure as was ever enacted by Congress. In the future, to modify or make it temporary will require the consent of the House, of the Senate, and of the Executive.

The title of a bill, however, is the part which goes out to the press, and the word "temporary" must have been inserted for a purpose. What was that purpose? It must have been that the framer wanted the people to believe its provisions were temporary. rary, or that he was ashamed of it as a permanent measure.

This legislation is one of the clearest instances that can be conceived of one people enacting laws which govern not only them-selves, but also another people. Abraham Lincoln, the greatest of American commoners, has said:

No man is good enough to govern another man without that other man's consent. When the white man governs himself, that is self-government; but when he governs himself and also another man, that is more than self-government, that is despotism.

The despotism of this measure, therefore, is in the exercise of a power in governing not only ourselves, but in governing another people without their consent. Our forefathers said that taxation people without their consent. Our forefathers said that taxation without representation was tyranny, and I believe it is as much tyranny to-day as it was in 1776. This is but one of the many results from the policy of the Administration in the acquisition and retention of the Philippine Islands. This bill naturally brings before us the question of the justice and wisdom of that entire policy. Whether we had not better now recognize the wrong and inexpediency of that policy, instead of legislating upon lines which are diametrically opposed to our form of government. Whether, instead of this measure, we had not better now promise to the people of the Philippine Islands their independence, and substitute legislation which will help them establish a government of their own, based upon the principles of a republic. of their own, based upon the principles of a republic.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to examine that policy, first, as to the moral aspect; second, as to the practical aspect.

MORAL ASPECT.

Mr. Chairman, at the time of the Revolutionary war there was practically but one form of government in existence. It recognized that all powers of government were vested in one man-the monarch—and that he would grant such rights and privileges to monarch—and that he would grant such rights and privileges to his subjects as he deemed proper. In order to fasten such a doctrine upon the people, an appeal had been made to their religious zeal in the claim that God himself had vested the power in the ruler. That doctrine was called "the divine right of kings." When tyranny and oppression were exercised to such an extent as to make conditions intolerable, the people had at times risen in their might and forced from the crown some privileges and rights. Such governments were then known as limited monarchies but the source of power as shown from the grant itself archies, but the source of power, as shown from the grant itself, was always recognized as existing in the monarch.

It was in the colonial days that a people inured to the hardships and privations of frontier life and far removed from the influences of the Crown, breathing the air of freedom and self-reliance which isolation always produces, began to reason why one man on account of birth should have power to govern another. Their reasoning after years produced a firm conviction in the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. The war to enforce those principles was truly called the Revolutionary war, because it completely revolutionized the theory of government then exercised by man. That Declaration was not a mere war document, but promulgated a doctrine for all time, founded upon the right of every person to prevent tyranny and oppression—founded upon the moral law itself.

That Declaration enunciated that "all men are created equal," not in intellect, not in color, not in size, but equally entitled to the inalienable rights of man.

It further declared that "man is entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," not by the grace of a President or the American Congress, but as an inalienable right by the grace of God Almighty himself. It further declared that "to attain these ends governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers" not from kings, presidents, or congresses, but "from the consent of the governed."

These principles are declared to be self-evident truths. They form the ethics of the establishment of order in society called government. They are principles of right as binding on the conscience as the commandment "Thou shalt not steal." They should be more binding, because they relate to a human right, while the commandment relates to a property right.

A violation of this moral law brings a punishment as certain and as severe as a violation of the commandment itself. It was Abraham Lincoln who said:

Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not themselves, and under a just God can not long retain it.

We can not justify the government of another people without their consent unless we justify the doctrine that might is right, and that is anarchy. When we sanction that doctrine in affairs of government we are teaching each inhabitant to apply it in individual affairs. A nation is but an aggregation of individuals, and a violation of the principles of justice is even more reprehensible in it than in the individual. When as a nation we trample under foot the rights of men, how can we expect different action among those who compose that nation?

The lynchings and other acts of violence which lately seem to be increasing at an alarming rate, both in numbers and atrocity, are but the logical results of the nations violation of the law of its own being.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT WILL PRODUCE EMPIRE AT HOME.

Sir, continued violation by the nation of the fundamental principles of a republic can not result otherwise than in a change in our form of government. We can not have a republican government for ourselves and imperial government for our colonies.

ment for ourselves and imperial government for our colonies. Sooner or later republican government must extend over the colonies or imperial government over the States.

Why? Because such a condition produces two schools of politics—one proclaiming the right of some men to govern, the other advocating the equality and rights of man. They will be unequally matched. The imperial school will contain nearly all the people of wealth and their dependents. The other will contain the humble citizens. These schools of politics will battle not only for the supremacy of their respective doctrines but also for the for the supremacy of their respective doctrines, but also for the extension of the same. This contest will be as was that for the extension or suppression of slavery, which spread not only to the States both slave and free, but to all the territory acquired by the United States, and which dominated every question in American relities for half a century even as to the acquisition of terriican politics for half a century, even as to the acquisition of territory itself.

Republics are formed only after revolution. The change to the empire is slow and gradual. One of the saddest lessons of history is that whenever these schools of politics have met in the republics of old the imperial school, with its dazzling influence of wealth and power, has always won. Let us hope that our love for the principles of the Declaration of Independence will prevent any such calamity to our beloved country.

It was Lincoln who said.

It was Lincoln who said:

It was Lincoln who said:

What constitutes the bulwark of our own liberty and independence? It is not our frowning battlements and our bristling seacoasts, the guns of our war steamers, or the strength of our gallant and disciplined army. These are not our reliance against a resumption of tyranny in our fair land. All of them may be turned against our liberties without making us stronger or weaker for the struggle. Our reliance is in the love of liberty which God has planted in our bosoms. Our defense is in the preservation of the spirit which prizes liberty as the heritage of all men, in all lands, everywhere. Destroy this spirit, and you have planted the seeds of despotism around your own doors. Familiarize yourselves with the chains of bondage, and you are preparing your own limbs to wear them. Accustomed to trample on the rights of those around you, you have lost the genius of your own independence and become the fit subjects of the first cunning tyrant who rises among you.

James Russell Lowell was once asked by the historian Guizot how long the Republic would endure. He replied, "So long as the ideas of its founders continue dominant."

Buckle, in his History of Civilization in England, has in these words shown why it was best for Great Britain herself that she

Such were the fruits of the policy of George III, but the mischief did not stop there. The opinions which it was necessary to advocate in order to justify this barbarous war recoiled upon ourselves. In order to defend the attempt to destroy the liberties of America, principles were laid down which, if carried into effect, would have subverted the liberties of England.

The historian Froude has said:

If there be one lesson which history clearly teaches, it is this—that free nations can not govern subject provinces. If they are unable or unwilling to admit their dependencies to share their own constitution, the constitution itself will fall in pieces from mere incompetence for its duties.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

It used to be denied in this Hall that Congress would ever exercise imperial power over the Philippines, but I do not hear any such denials now. Ever since the enactment of the Spooner amendment, which vested "all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands in such person or persons as the President shall direct," there has been an abandonment of that position, and the contention made that it is no worse than some other law that has been enacted by Corperson.

of that position, and the contention made that it is no worse than some other law that has been enacted by Congress.

The plea that is now urged is that the Spooner amendment is similar to the act vesting in President Jefferson the authority to govern the territory embraced in the Louisiana purchase. Of course, when territory is bought a provisional government must be authorized to take possession. The distinction between the two acts is that one was limited to a few months and was a step in carrying out the intention to give citizenship and statehood, while the ing out the intention to give citizenship and statehood, while the other was unlimited in time and was a step in carrying out the intention never to give citizenship or statehood. Mr. Jefferson, in the treaty ceding the territory of Louisiana, had inserted a clause which provided that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall which provided that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States." He and all other Americans intended to give to the people of Louisiana not only the benefits of the Constitution, which they did as soon as possible, but also statehood, which they did within five years after the purchase. Whereas no one of the majority even pretends that they will give to the people of the Philippines either the benefits of the Constitution or statehood, now or at any time in the future. The Spooner amendment, enacted by the Congress of a nation 7,000 miles from the Philippine Islands, vested in one man for an unlimited period of time unlimited power to govern another people without their consent.

Sir, it is impossible to conceive of a more arbitrary or despotic

Sir, it is impossible to conceive of a more arbitrary or despotic ower vested in a monarch than that granted to the President of the United States

Under that authority five men of the Anglo-Saxon race, all citizens of the United States of America, were appointed to govern a people of another race, to pass all the laws, impose all the taxes, appropriate all the moneys collected, and appoint all the officers in the archipelago.

Great Britain prides herself on the fact that she is an empire and exercises imperial power, but she has never yet imposed upon a single one of her colonies such an arbitrary form of government. George III never imposed such government upon the American colonies even in the period of a hundred and twenty-five years ago, but always permitted each colony to have a legislative body, elected by the people, who imposed the taxes to be collected and made the appropriations of the same.

Paradoxical as it may appear it took the United States of Collected and the collected as it may appear it took the United States of Collected and Collected and Collected as it may appear it took the United States of Collected as it may appear it took the United States of Collected and Collected as it may appear it took the United States of Collected and Collected and Collected and Collected as it may appear it took the United States of Collected and Collected and Paradoxical as it may appear, it took the United States, a Government of the people, to impose the most arbitrary form of government known to man upon the people of a poor and alien race. Sir, it is useless to say that satisfactory government will be given by such power. No government would be satisfactory to us which prevented our people from having a voice in the same, even if the men who governed us were the best on earth and of our own nationality, and how can we expect satisfaction from the people of an alien race as to government imposed by us?

Daniel Webster expressed this sentiment most forcibly when he said:

We may talk of it as we please, but there is nothing that satisfies mankind in an enligtened age, unless man is governed by his own country and the institutions of his own government. No matter how easy may be the yoke of a foreign power, no matter how lightly it sits upon the shoulders, if it be not imposed by the voice of his own nation and his own country he will not, he can not, and he means not to be happy under its burdens.

It is said you will give them the blessings of our civilization. You can not do it, no matter how benevolent your intentions might be. The foundation of civilization is justice, and you can not instill a sense of justice while you govern men without their consent. It was Dr. Jose Risal, the Filipino patriot, who said that in his visits to the countries of the world he had noticed that civilization prevailed in each nation in the exact proportion that liberty prevailed.

Unless we give them a government of their own, unless we give them independence, there can be no administration that will be satisfactory to them or would be satisfactory to you if you were in their place. The spirit of freedom, of liberty, and of independence lived not alone in the hearts of our forefathers, but lives in the little brown men as well. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.

WOULD ANARCHY PREVAIL UNDER PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE?

As an excuse for the imposition of such arbitrary government upon the Philippine people it is said that they are not capable of self-government, that anarchy would result from their control of affairs, and that we will give to them "the largest measure of self-government consistent with their welfare and our duties."

Ah, Mr. Chairman, that is the same excuse which every tyrant has made for enslaving his subjects since the world began. statements, predictions, and promises have always been made to conceal the infamy of oppressive measures, and the strenuousness with which they have been urged has been in the exact proportion to their infamy. No monarch thinks his people capable of self-government.

It was General Gage who wrote, after the battle of Bunker Hill, that the Americans had exchanged liberty for anarchy. It was George III who said:

I am desirous of restoring to them [the American colonists] the blessings of law, which they have fatally and desperately exchanged for calamities of war and the arbitrary tyranny of their chiefs.

The contention that if the Filipinos were given self-government anarchy would ensue—that they would proceed to cut each others throats—is the boldest and most unfounded assumption. But, even if true, it would not have wrought such destruction as we have inflicted upon them.

During the existence of their government the Philippine forces captured the city of Iloilo, the second largest city in the islands. Although that city had a large percentage of Spaniards and for-eign residents, yet no massacre occurred, no looting took place. Life and property were protected, and both foreign and native inhabitants admitted that the city had never been better governed.

Mr. Leonard R. Sargent, who, with Paymaster Wilcox, traveled over 600 miles through the interior of Luzon during October and November, 1898, in his report says:

November, 1898, in his report says:

At that time the military forces of the United States held control only in Manila, with its environs, and in Cavite, and had no authority to proceed farther. In the meantime the native population, taking matters into their own hands, had declared their independence from all foreign jurisdiction and had set up a provisional government with Aguinaldo at its head. Although this government had never been recognized, * * * it can not be denied that, in a region occupied by many millions of inhabitants, for nearly six months it stood alone between anarchy and order. It was the opinion at Manila during this period, and possibly in the United States, that their condition was something akin to anarchy.

We found the conditions to be much at variance with this opinion.

As a tribute to the efficiency of Aguinaldo's government and to the lawabiding character of his subjects, I offer the fact that Mr. Wilcox and I pursued our journey throughout in perfect security and returned to Manila with only the most pleasing recollections of the quiet and orderly life which we found the natives to be leading under their new régime. * * We traveled first across the province of Nueva Ecija, by far the poorest and least interesting of all the provinces we visited. And yet even here we were greatly surprised by the intelligence and refinement of the inhabitants.

The maintenance of law and order by the Philippine government during the trying times following the battle of Manila was truly wonderful. As we can only judge the future by the past, it seems to me as conclusive as can be that anarchy would not prevail under Philippine independence.

ARE THE FILIPINOS CAPABLE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT?

Mr. Chairman, let us see whether the Philippine people are not capable of establishing and maintaining a government of their own, not as perfect as ours, but far better and more satisfactory than any we can impose upon them.

If the intelligence of the Americans be taken as the standard by which the capacity for self-government is to be determined. then it is very doubtful whether any other people are capable of establishing and maintaining a republican form of government. Every country has peoples of high and low order of intelligence, and if we are to assume that the men of lowest order of civilization are to rule we might exclude from self-government every It is the experience of mankind, however, that nation on earth. the intelligent classes in all countries rule. Capacity to perform public duties is one of the highest qualifications for office in the mind even of the most ignorant. That being true, there are very few peoples who are not capable of self-government. It was Henry Clay who said that it was impossible for him to conceive of a people who were incapable of self-government.

It was Secretary Hay, in his preface to Castilian Days, who said:

There are those who think the Spaniards are not fit for freedom. I believe that no people are fit for anything else.

Of the republics of Central and South America it is safe to say that, although they may not be as perfect in the administration of affairs as the United States, yet they have given to the people governments far better and freer from acts of tyranny and oppression than the governments which preceded them.

The general impression exists among many Americans that the Philippine people are savages. A visit to the islands will certainly dispel any such illusion. The members of the uncivilized tribes of the archipelago are few in number, compared to the total population; they are fewer in proportion than were the Indians in America at the time of the establishment of our Republic. They rove in bands and are as hostile to the Filipinos as were the red men to our forefathers. When I find behind the prescription desks of the numerous drug stores of the islands, even when kept by Americans and Englishmen, Filipinos compounding medicines taken from bottles labeled in Latin; when I pounding medicines taken from bottles labeled in Latin; when I see behind the counters of banks, having large capital, natives acting as bookkeepers and receiving and paying tellers; when I find them as merchants and clerks in almost all lines of business, as telegraph operators and ticket agents, conductors and engineers upon railroads, and as musicians rendering upon almost all instruments high-class music; when I am told that they alone make the observations and intricate calculations at the Manila observatory, and that prior to the insurrection there were 2,100 schools in the islands and 5,000 students at the university at Manila; when I find the better class living in good, substantial, and sometimes elegant houses, and many of them pursuing professional occupations, I can not but conclude that it is a base slander to compare these people to the Apaches or other American Even the civilizing test of Christianity is in their favor, as a greater proportion are members of the church than among our own people. Of the 8,000.000 inhabitants, Mr. Sawyer, in his work on the Philippine Islands, asserts that 5,869,000 are Christian natives.

But, sir, even as to the Indians, as uncivilized as they may be, our Government recognizes that it produces a better condition of affairs to let them govern themselves, and thereby we even recognize in them a capacity of self-government. We do not rule them. We make treaties with them as we do with nations. appoint a governor or commission to govern them, nor judges to administer laws among them, nor a police force to maintain order. We let them select their own chiefs, punish their own criminals, and in every way govern themselves so long as they remain on their reservations.

The instinct of self-interest implanted in man makes him ordinarily a better agent in managing his own family and affairs than would be one of greater ability or higher attainments without that And as with man so with nations, that same principle of self-betterment ordinarily makes each nation most capable of managing its affairs to the advancement of its own people.

No better illustration of this can be found than in the action of the representatives of our Government in fixing salaries of officials in the Philippine Islands to be paid out of funds collected from the people of that poor and alien race. I hold in my hand the Washington Post of December 6, 1901, which gives a list of the salaries paid to these officials.

The chief executive receives an annual salary of $15,000 as governor and of $5,000 as member of the Philippine Commission, and is allowed the use of a fine residence in Manila. Each of the American members of the Commission receives $5,000 per annum for acting in his legislative capacity and $10,000 per annum in addition for acting as head of a bureau. The salary of the chief justice of the supreme court is $7,500, and of each of the six associate justices (an exceedingly large number for a territorial court) is $7,000. The salary of the secretary of the Commission is $7,500; of the treasurer, $6,000; of the auditor, $6,000; of the collector of customs, $6,000; of the director of posts, $6,000; of the chief of education, $6,000, and of the chief of the health bureau, $6,000, all payable in gold.

Let each citizen of this Republic contrast with these amounts the salaries paid to similar officials in his own State and he will be appalled at the great difference between the same.

I do not wish to impugn the honesty of the men who fixed these salaries—they no doubt think the salaries are fair—but to call attention to the fact that such action naturally grows out of the attempt of one people to govern another. It is always easy to spend other people's money. That is the very reason why no nation can give good government to another. If the men who fixed these salaries were responsible to a constituency, does anyone imagine that such amounts would have been voted?

The aggregate area of the Philippine Islands is 115,300 square miles, about the same as that of the Territory of Arizona, yet the governor of such Territory receives only $3,000 per annum and is not furnished with an executive mansion. The area of the Territory of Alache is 500 tife countries. tory of Alaska is 599,446 square miles, more than five times that of the Philippine Islands, and yet her governor receives a salary of $3,000 per annum. We have no difficulty in getting good and competent governors for these Territories.

But here is a governor's salary of double that which is given to the chief executive of the greatest State in the Union, which State is more able to give to its head official a million dollars a year than are the poor Filipinos able to pay the amount fixed.

Here are salaries given to each of the American members of the Commission, which aggregate $15,000 a year, three times the salary of a United States Senator, nearly twice the amount received by a Cabinet officer of the greatest nation of the world.

How must such salaries appear to the Filipino laborer who, furnishing his own food and lodging, earns but 25 cents in gold a day? It must be remembered that wealth is nothing but stored labor, and that in the last analysis labor in one form or another pays all taxes. Can such be satisfactory government to him, or would it be satisfactory to you, if you were in his place?

It may be said that although Filipinos from patriotic motives might be willing to serve their country for $3,000 per annum, that we can not obtain good and capable Americans to go to these tropical islands and discharge the duties for less than the salaries named. If that is true, it only demonstrates the impossibility of one people giving good government to another.

one people giving good government to another.

It further appears that there are 1,176 Americans in the insular service of the Philippines, 616 Americans in the municipal service at Manila, 33 Americans in the judicial service there, 107 Americans in the provincial service there, and 112 Americans in the Philippine constabulary.

He has erected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance. * * * He has made judges dependent on his will alone for the tenure of their offices and the amount and payment of their salaries. (Declaration of Independence.)

Mr. Chairman, does not the conflict of interest between us and the Philippine people, arising from the growing of competing staple products, render us incapable of governing them to their best interest? We know that it will be to the welfare of the islands to give free trade with the United States. Americans, Spaniards, and Filipinos there unanimously agree that the islands spaniards, and Finginos there unanimously agree that the islands can never be well developed without it; yet the very fact that we hesitate in the matter shows that we are consulting our own interests instead of theirs. No matter how learned and just the judge may be, the ethics of our jurisprudence have determined that he is incapacitated from deciding a case when his own interest might be affected. Nations are but aggregations of individuals and one whice to the convenience. uals and are subject to the same influences

In the passage of this measure, by consulting our own interests and not theirs, we demonstrate our incapacity to give them good government.

The Filipino is not a bold, warlike, or unruly person. He impresses everyone as of a shrinking, submissive, kind nature, and one who will suffer great wrongs before he will resist. Such people always appeal to the law and support good government. They have not the tendency of the Spaniards toward revolution. The revolts in which they have participated have been to overther the Spanish reigns of terror, almost equal in barbarity to the revolts in which they have participated have been to over-throw the Spanish reigns of terror, almost equal in barbarity to that of the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands.

The experience they had in self-government prior to the insur-rection was entirely in their favor. They established a govern-ment modeled after our own. Their state papers would have done credit to any nation. They inaugurated good judicial, school, and revenue systems, and preserved law and order.

Consul Barrett, a strong supporter of the present administra-tion, wrote of the 100 men who composed the Philippine Congress, as follows:

These men, whose sessions I repeatedly attended, conducted themselves with decorum, and showed a knowledge of debate and parliamentary law that would not compare unfavorably with the Japanese Parliament. The exceutive portion of the government was made up of a ministry of bright men who seemed to understand their respective positions.

It is said that the Filipino congress referred to contained a larger percentage of university graduates than our own House of Representatives.

Consul-General Wildman, an appointee of President McKinley, speaking of the Philippine government, said:

Aguinaldo has made life and property safe, preserved order, and encouraged a continuation of agricultural and industrial pursuits. He has made brigandage and loot impossible, respected private property, forbidden excess either in revenge or in the name of the state, and made a woman's honor safer in Luzon than it has been in three hundred years.

Admiral Dewey, it will be remembered, cabled:

These people are far superior in their intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races.

Prof. Ferdinand Blumentritt, of Bohemia, who spent a long time in the Philippine Islands, has said:

time in the Philippine Islands, has said:

The excuse that they, the Philippine people, are not ripe for independence is not founded on facts. The Filipinos number more educated people than the Kingdom of Servia and the principalities of Bulgaria and Montenegro. They have fewer illiterates than the States of the Balkan Peninsula, Russia, many provinces of Spain and Portugal, and the Latin republics of America. There are provinces in which few people can be found who do not at least read. They pay more attention to education than Spain or the Balkan States do. There is no lack of trained men fit to govern their own country, and indeed in every branch, because under the Spanish rule the official business was entirely transacted by native subalterns. The whole history of the Katipunan revolt and of the war against Spain and America serves to place in the best light the capability of the Filipinos for self-government; for, even in Polavieja's time, excesses occurred enly exceptionally, and they were always punished. The history of the Philippine revolution is not stained with a long series of cruelties like those of the revolutions of the great civilized nations of Europe. That their tendency is toward European standards is evident from the respect which they showed to the lives and property of foreigners as well during the Katipunan revolt as since. The existence of a spirit of discipline and subordination and of respect for authority is shown by the morale of the Philippine army and its obedience to Aguinaldo's orders. Whoever is familiar with the history of the revolt of the Spanish-American colonies will remember how much discord there was among the rebels, and how they betrayed, descrited, and even in the presence of the enemy fought one another; but in the Filipino army all was harmonious, just as in a loyal and well-disciplined European army.

Therefore, no one can deny that the Filipinos have more right to form an independent government than many European and American countries.

It was Gen. Henry W. Lawton who is reported to have said: It was Gen. Henry W. Lawton who is reported to have said:

Among the Filipinos there are many cultured people who would ornament society anywhere in the world, ladies who have studied and traveled, men who have had a good education and a fine brain. Take them as a class, there can as many of them read and write as the inhabitants in many places in America. As for their treachery, you would not have to come so far as this to find that. There is plenty of it in North America. All nations are treacherous, more or less. Some men and nations have treachery trained out of them more than others. What we want is to stop this accursed war. It is time for diplomacy, time for mutual understandings. These men are indomitable. At Bacoor bridge they waited till the Americans brought their cannon to within 55 yards of their trenches. Such men have the right to be heard. All they want is a little justice. I established a civil government at Belinag, with the government entirely in the hands of the natives. It worked to perfection. All these people need for self-government is the protection of our troops till affairs have quieted, and then they will, I have no doubt, advance as rapidly as the Japanese, perhaps more rapidly.

But if the Filipinos were incarable of self-government we could doubt, advance as rapidly as the Japanese, perhaps more rapidly.

But if the Filipinos were incapable of self-government we could not prepare them for that condition by legislation such as this or any other legislation we would impose upon them. Because as long as we rule them we are endorsing that might is right, the very principle that is opposed to self-government. History records no instance of a people being prepared for self-government by the rule of another. You might as well expect a person to learn how to swim without going into the water.

The best evidence of the ability of the Philippine people to govern themselves is that they possess a large intelligent class, thoroughly identified in interest with the islands, and capable of administering good government. The Civil Commission has recoughly identified in interest with the islands, and capable of administering good government. The Civil Commission has recognized this ability by recently adding three native members to that governing body; by appointing three Filipinos judges of the supreme court; by selecting about half of the judges of the first instance and nearly all of the governors of the provinces from that race, and by appointing a solicitor-general and many other officers from the natives. Are these officials not in the governing business, and do they not perform their work as well as the Americans? Is it possible that they are capable of governing because they were appointed by the representatives of a distant Americans? Is it possible that they are capable of governing because they were appointed by the representatives of a distant nation? Would they lose that ability if elected or chosen by properly constituted authority of their own? In the latter event they would make far better officers, because they would consult only the interests of their own people instead of that of a nation 7,000 miles away. It was Abraham Lincoln who said:

Let us discard all this quibbling about this man or the other man, this race, and that race, and the other race being inferior and therefore they must be placed in an inferior position, discarding the standard which has been left to us. Let us discard all these things and unite as one people throughout this land until we shall once more stand up declaring that all men are created equal.  * I leave you hoping that the lamp of liberty will burn in your bosoms until there shall no longer be a doubt that all men are created equal.

I therefore contend that the Philippine people are far more capable of governing themselves than we are capable of governing them, and that when we impose upon them a government by force we transgress the moral law itself.

In my judgment there is but one solution of this problem, and that is to treat them exactly as we promised to treat the Cubans.

Mr. Chairman, having examined the question of the acquisition and retention of the Philippine Islands from the moral aspect,

I now wish to examine it as to the practical aspect. Is it best for our own country? In treating of this phase of the question I wish to look at it, first, from the political standpoint; second, from the commercial standpoint, and third, from the military standpoint.

I. FROM THE POLITICAL STANDPOINT

Mr. Chairman, from the political standpoint I mean as it will affect the great political policies of our Government.

We are compelled to treat the Filipinos either as subjects or citizens. There is no halfway ground on which to stand. The denial to them of any rights of citizenship makes them subjects.

denial to them of any rights of citizensing makes them subjects.

If we treat them as subjects, they will read in our Declaration of Independence that "all men are created equal." They will ask the questions: Are we not men? Was this statement intended to apply only to the Anglo-Saxon race? Was the principle intended to be limited to the confines of the thirteen colonies?

Then they will read from the speech of Abraham Lincoln this importal extension.

immortal statement:

immortal statement:

Wise statesmen as they were, they knew the tendency of prosperity to breed tyrants; and so they established these great self-evident truths, that, when in the distant future some man, some faction, some interest, should set up the doctrine that none but rich men, or none but white men, or none had any or none because of the purious of happiness, their posterity might look up again to the Declaration of Independence and take courage to renew the battle which their fathers began, * * * so that no man should thereafter dare to limit and circumscribe the principles on which the temple of liberty was being built.

Then they will say, as we would say under similar circumstances, that there are no such limitations in the instrument.

They will further read in the Declaration of Independence that to secure the inalienable rights of man, "governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." They will ask, Why is not our consent asked in the government of our own islands and of our own people? And they will further ask, Why is it that a distant nation that we never heard of prior to four years ago now declares that It Will Give to our people the largest measure of self-government consistent with our welfare, but to be determined by them and not by us? Then they will read from Lincoln the following terrible arraignment of such a position:

These arguments that are made that the inferior races are to be treated with as much allowance as they are capable of enjoying; that as much is to be done as their condition will allow—what are these arguments? They are the arguments that kings have made for enslaving the people in all ages of the world. You will find that all the arguments in favor of kingcraft were of this class; that they always bestrode the necks of the people, not that they wanted to do it, but because the people were better off for being ridden. Turn it whatever way you will, whether it come from the mouth of a king, an excuse for enslaving the people of the country, or from the mouth of men of one race for enslaving the men of another, it is all the same old serpent.

Then they will read from the Declaration of Independence "That

Then they will read from the Declaration of Independence "That whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

And then they will ask, Why does not this Declaration give us the right to have a government of our own to attain these ends?

Sir, there can be no answer to these questions, from the stand-point of the Administration, that will be satisfactory to them or would be satisfactory to us if we were in their place. Therefore to treat them as subjects is to give them cause for discontent and for violence.

Our government of the islands under these conditions will be a miserable failure. It will require thousands and thousands of soldiers, which will make the cost of holding the islands far out of proportion to the benefits we will receive. It will require an increase of the soldiers in the exact proportion that we educate them to understand the principles of the Declaration of Independence. What political difficulties do we get into if we treat them as citizens? We say that the products of the cheap labor of the Philippine Islands can be brought to this country to compete freely with the products of the labor of the American citizens, and that the Filipino can come to the country to which he owes allegiance and can himself here compete with the labor of our own people. We know that the American laborer will never stand the competition of the cheap labor of the Orient, and they should not be compelled to compete with men who live on 3 cents a day and whose daily wage is between 20 and 30 cents. We have had an exhibition of the spirit of the American workman upon this question. The permission of this Government to let Chinese immigrate to our shores produced among our own workmen discontent and violence, and if restrictive legislation had not speedily followed it would have resulted in revolution itself.

So that when we treat the Filipinos as citizens and let them compete with our own workmen we do our own laborers a wrong and give them cause for discontent and for violence. Thereby we simply transfer the storm center of discontent from the Philippine Islands, where it will exist if we treat them as subjects to our own country, where it will exist it we treat the Nor can we ever solve this problem during annexation, because our own country, where it will exist if we treat them as citizens. we invoke principles which are against human nature. The only solution is in treating them as we do the Cubans—help them establish a government of their own and give them their independence.

MONROE DOCTRINE

Mr. Chairman, another great political objection to holding the Philippine Islands is that it violates a doctrine which has been maintained and held sacred by the people of this country ever

It was in 1815, after the downfall of Napoleon, that an alliance was formed among some of the continental powers of Europe, by which they sought to perpetuate the principles of absolute monarchy as against the growing tendency for republican forms of government. In recognition of the idea of "the divine right of kings" this combination was termed the "Holy Alliance."

Spain was a party to that combination, and at a meeting of their diplomatic representatives held at Verona, Italy, in October, 1822, it was proposed that there be restored to Spain, as her colonies, the Spanish-American republics of South and Central America, which had asserted and established their independence. It was an alignment of powers in behalf of monarchies against republics, in behalf of oppression against liberty. As part compensation to France, one of the nations to the alliance for this proposed interference in the affairs of the Western Hemisphere, it was suggested that the princes of the restored Bourbons of France be placed over some of the Spanish-American empires. When President Monroe announced that we would consider any attempt on the part of European monarchies to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety, there was unquestionably an implied promise that we would not interfere with the affairs of the Eastern Hem-

The announcement of this policy elicited the greatest excitement in Europe, and received a most enthusiastic indorsement from the people of the United States.

Sir, it was an ultimatum to the monarchs of Europe in behalf of liberty and independence.

Mr. Chairman, no Presidential message in the history of this Government has produced such far-reaching and beneficial results to the Republic as that of December 2, 1823. Truly it has been said that it was the second Declaration of Independence. Although the doctrine enunciated therein has not been recognized by the powers of Europe as a principle of international law in express terms, yet it is nothing more than the same principle they all acknowledge in the doctrine of the balance of power, and it has in numerous instances been acknowledged by their conduct. France, in withdrawing its support to the claims of Maximilian to the crown of Mexico, and Great Britain, in consenting to arbitration of the Venezuelan boundary dispute, in answer to the demands of the United States, acquiesced in the clearest manner to this American doctrine.

OUR OWN SAFETY INVOLVED.

First, the principle of the Monroe doctrine is based on the safety of our Government. There is no power in North or South America that can endanger our national existence, even if it so desired. The rival powers are all located across the Atlantic Ocean. There is no danger from those powers as long as they have no footing on the Western Hemisphere. Hence our safety and self-protection dictate a policy which prevents them from obtaining paramountcy in any part of the New World.

The blessings which have flowed and must continue to flow from such a policy are inestimable. Instead of the constant disputes and wars which must arise between rival nations possessing contiguous or threatening territory, we are bound to have the blessings of almost universal peace.

Sir, the difference between the development of a country which has peace and one which has wars at frequent intervals in the has peace and one which has wars at frequent intervals is the difference between wealth and poverty, prosperity and depression.

To deplete the productive forces of a country at frequent intervals, in order to supply soldiers for war and for large standing armies, must, in a long series of years, affect most seriously the development of that country.

By adhering to this doctrine and confining our acquisitions of territory to this hemisphere, and to those only with the consent of the governed, we will not only have peace, but we will remove the necessity of a large standing army, which contiguous rival nations are compelled to maintain in order to insure peace.

The progress of a nation is, in the long run, determined by the amount that is levied upon its industries. Its development is inversely in proportion to the amount of the taxes imposed.

In the nineteenth century there was expended by the nations of Europe in maintaining wars and standing armies more than $100,000,000,000. On account of the large military and naval establishments made necessary to preserve peace the taxes of Great Britain are 10 per cent, of France 13 per cent, and of Germany 10½ per cent of the earnings of their peoples. In the United States the taxes were, previous to the engagement in Manila Bay, only 5 per cent of the earnings of our people.

At the beginning of the century we possessed none of the accumulated wealth which made the European nations at that time powerful, and yet, by adhering to the policy enunciated by President Monroe, which insures peace and low taxation, we have built a nation which in wealth surpasses any one of our rivals, and in productive power is equal to Great Britain, France, and Germany combined.

For our own safety and prosperity we can not be too careful in further scrupulously guarding the principles of the Monroe

THE PRINCIPLE OF HUMAN RIGHTS INVOLVED.

The second great result of the Monroe doctrine was its benefit to mankind. At the time it was announced, republics other than the United States had not firm footing among the nations of the

They were scorned and ridiculed by all the monarchies. The Holy Alliance expected to extinguish all the republics of the Western World except the United States, and at one time it even intimated that it might assist Great Britain in restoring to her dominion the States of this Union.

Sir, that message called a halt to the movement of the European monarchies and assured the protection of our Government to the liberties of the people of North and South America.

It was an important step in the forward march of civilization and a great movement in behalf of human rights. It made the New World a refuge for the oppressed of every nation and the home of freedom and liberty.

The European nations have no use for republican institutions; and if the Monroe doctrine is modified or compromised it will not be long until they get such a footing upon the Western World as will endanger the republics of this hemisphere. When we hold When we hold territory in the Orient we are in justice bound to give to the European nations the privilege of acquiring territory on this continent. I for one am not willing to abandon or jeopardize the wholesome effect of the Monroe doctrine.

RACE PROBLEMS.

The history of the world shows that race problems have been the most difficult of all to solve. While people have been willing to acknowledge the equality of men of their own race, they have generally in practice denied it as to other races. While man will suffer the bitterest enemy of his own race to exercise authority over him, he will not quietly permit men of other races to do the Race wars will surely ensue, and they are the most cruel and unrelenting of all conflicts. Why jeopardize the peace and quiet of our contented people, and invite the violation of the laws of our Government by adding to our country a people of a tropical clime, who are not homogeneous with us in either manners, customs, or character?

From the political standpoint, therefore, it seems to me foolish for the United States to attempt to hold the Philippine Islands.

II. FROM THE COMMERCIAL STANDPOINT.

Mr. Chairman, I wish now to examine this question from the commercial standpoint. That the Philippine Islands can never become a source of profit, either to the United States Governbecome a source of profit, either to the United States Government or to the American people, seems susceptible of demonstration. Peace exists in nearly all the islands, but it is a pacification resulting from fear, and the smoldering fire of insurrection still burns in the hearts of the people. The losses of the Philippine forces in the late war were exceedingly large, and it is but natural, where death has visited so many homes, that animosity to American rule should exist for at least a generation. While that feeling continues it will be unsafe to withdraw our soldiers from the islands. Organized resistance is over, yet 43,000 of our troops still remain in the archipelago, and we are sending more. In my judgment, the time will never come when a less force than 30,000 men will be required to preserve order in the 1,000 islands. divided from each other by waterways, wide and dangerous, and inhabited by 8,000,000 people of an alien race.

Gen. Wesley Merritt, in a recent interview, said:

Doubtless the American people will be sorry to be assured that a permanent army of 40,000 soldiers will be required to hold the Philippines; but conservative officers on the spot are convinced that this view of the situation is

The following extract is from a recent letter from General Chaffee to Major Heath:

You ask me when, in my opinion, the greater part of the troops will be withdrawn. I wish I could but answer you with any degree of definiteness. The same query was propounded by General Corbin when he was here. In reply he was told that the force should not be reduced below the 30,000 level for at least five years. I am of the opinion that at least that number of men will be required for a much longer time—perhaps for a quarter of a century.

The revenues collected from the Philippine people are not more than sufficient to meet the expenditures of the civil government, nor are they likely to exceed that amount if the improvements so greatly needed are to be made. Except in the vicinity of the larger cities there are no public roads or bridges, and in cities and towns outside of Manila water and sewer systems, schoolhouses, and proper public buildings, electric light and gas plants are unknown. Nearly every harbor in the islands requires large improvements. The Civil Commission, in their last report, used the following language:

In view of the very great burdens which will be placed upon the public civil funds, the moment a satisfactory school system is inaugurated and the needs for internal improvements are supplied, the revenue, unless materially increased, will be insufficient.

The people are poor and unable to pay higher taxes than those required to meet the expenses and urgently needed expenditures of the civil government.

Mr. Chairman, for a quarter of a century the War Department has estimated the average cost of a soldier in times of peace, including his food, clothing, equipment, ammunition, and transportation, at $1,000 per annum, and the appropriations of Congress have accorded therewith. The cost of the army in the Philippines, however, is fully 50 per cent higher, on account of the additional pay to officers and men, the greater prices of supplies, and the increased cost of transportation. As it is dangerous to keep our troops in a distance must be traversed often. The maintaining of 30,000 soldiers in the Philippines in times of peace therefore means an expenditure on the part of the National Government of $45,000,000 per annum.

OUR COMMERCE IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Such expenditure can not be justified on the ground that the islands will largely increase our commerce. I hold in my hand the annual report of the Secretary of War, dated November 27, 1901. According to that report the imports to the Philippine Islands for the fiscal year 1901 came from the following countries:

United States	$2, 855, 685
United Kingdom	6, 956, 145
Germany	2, 135, 252
France	1,683,929
Spain	2, 161, 352
Unina	$4, 339, 941
Hongkong	2, 340, 585
British East Indies	2, 182, 892
All other countries	5, 623, 625

The exports of the islands went to the following countries:

United States	$2,572,021
United Kingdom	10, 704, 741
Germany	81,526
France	1,934,256
Spain	1,655,255
China	73,701
Hongkong	2,697,276
British East Indies	759, 286
All other countries	2,736,886
Total	23, 214, 948

Sir, I regard that statement as the most powerful and potent argument, from the commercial standpoint, against the retention of the Philippine Islands that has ever been made. It truly tells a wonderful tale.

Although the flag of our country has been floating over the ports of the archipelago for nearly three years, yet it will be seen from that statement that the United States has acquired not one-tenth of the imports to the islands. It will be noted that the total imports from the United States was only $2,855,685, and a large part of that consisted of goods demanded and purchased by our own soldiers. It is asserted that the average exporter, after paying transportation charges and insurance, does not make a profit of more than 10 per cent upon his goods. Ten per cent of the imports to the islands from our country was simply $285,568. That is the total profit in an entire year which was made to our commerce by the holding of the Philippine Islands.

what an absurd proposition that the National Government should make an annual expenditure of $45,000,000 in order for commerce to make a profit of $285,568. Who gets the profit—the United States Government? Oh, no. The profit is to the exporter. Who pays the $45,000,000 a year? The Government. And who pays the Government? The people of the United States.

It must be borne in mind that these figures are predicated upon a recease basis the exposses pow being fully 50 per cent greater.

It must be borne in mind that these figures are predicated upon a peace basis, the expenses now being fully 50 per cent greater. How long will the American people stand the expenditure of $45,000,000 a year out of moneys collected from the people for the purpose of putting into the pockets of a few of the exporters of goods a profit of $285,568 a year?

Divide the $45,000,000 by the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year and you will find that the Government, on a peace basis, must spend $123,287 each day. An expense every sixty hours of more than the total profit in an entire year to the exporter of goods. An expense of $157 for each dollar of profit to commerce.

It is said, however, that our commerce with the Philippines will

It is said, however, that our commerce with the Philippines will increase, and so it may, but it will require years to make this increase substantial. The United States with its phenomenal record only doubled its exports in twenty-odd years. Our exports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, were $835,638,658, and for 1901 were $1,487,656,544. Suppose our exports to the islands double, treble, or even increase tenfold (surely that is a sufficiently optimistic estimate), still we would have the expenditure on the part of the Government of more than $15 for every dollar of profit of the Government of more than $15 for every dollar of profit made by our exporters.

Mr. Chairman, these figures state much more favorably to the Government the situation than in reality exists. They do not take into consideration the payment of pensions to soldiers and widows for disease and death accelerated by a tropical climate, nor the cost of fortifying the seaboard cities of the islands, nor the large appropriations needed for an additional navy to defend distant possessions, so vulnerable to attack. The cost of imperialism is far greater than I have stated. It is shown in the appropriations of Congress for each of the last two years as contrasted with those for the year immediately preceding the Spanish war.

The appropriations were: For the fiscal year ending June 30-

$469,499,010 710,150,892 720,338,575 year ending June 30, 1903 743,374,804 ------Official estimates for the year ending June 30, 1903

After allowing the average percentage for increased service required by growth of population, these appropriations demonstrate that the cost of imperialism has been more than $200,000,000 each year.

If we could take the hundreds of millions of dollars which are worse than thrown away in the Philippines and apply them to the reclamation of the 73,000,000 acres of public arid lands of the West capable of being irrigated, more lands would be opened for settlement for our people than in all the islands and countries of the tropical zone.

But greater than all cost is the loss in life of many of the flower and youth of our land. The deadly effects of a tropical climate, even in times of peace, will continue to deplete the ranks of our soldiers as long as we hold the islands.

TRADE DOES NOT FOLLOW THE FLAG.

The report of the Secretary of War tells another mighty truth with relation to the imports to the Philippine Islands. It says:

The imports from the United Kingdom, from Germany, from France, and from the British East Indies have increased in a greater proportion than the mports from the United States.

We have heard of the claim that trade follows the flag, yet this

We have heard of the claim that trade follows the flag, yet this statement shows that the Philippine people are increasing their trade with other countries more than they are with the country whose flag floats over the archipelago. It will be observed that the imports from Spain were $2,161,352. What does it mean? It means that the people of the island bought from hated Spain, the country with whom they had been at war for many years, almost as many goods as they purchased from the United States. It demonstrates that trade does not follow the flag, but does follow the price list, that the Filipines like the Americans will have the price list; that the Filipinos, like the Americans, will buy where they can buy cheapest and sell where they can sell dearest.

In the past ten years England, with all her colonies, has lost in trade, while the United States, with no colonies, has, within the same period, increased her trade by more than 50 per cent. Yea, more, while England has lost trade with her own colonies, the United States has gained trade in the same colonies.

Mr. Courtney, president of the Royal Statistical Society of Great Britain, says that nine out of every ten Europeans going to tropical colonies are either buried or return home invalided within three years; that the largest of the 120 Belgian trading companies maintain a service of only seven months out of every twenty-four.

maintain a service of only seven months out of every twenty-four. Against such a death rate no commercial profit can be shown.

No one who has visited the Philippine Islands has ever claimed that it is a white man's country; that our farmers or laborers could do manual labor there. Although we have been occupying the islands for nearly three years, not a single white man can be found engaged in raising agricultural products. The only chance is for the rich white man, who can utilize the cheap labor of the islands, and even as to that, it is doubtful whether money can be made thereby. They can never become colonies in the true sense. made thereby. They can never become colonies in the true sense of the word, but only military settlements and places of residence for officeholders of the islands.

WE CAN NEVER CONTROL CHINESE TRADE THROUGH MANILA

The idea that we can obtain the trade of China through Manila is most chimerical. That port is not on the way from our Pacific coast cities to China. The line of travel of steamships is and coast cities to China. The line of travel of steamships is and always will be by Yokohama, Nagasaki, and Hongkong to Manila. It must be remembered that the earth rounds to the north, and the shortest route is the one which goes within 200 miles of the Aleutian Islands. Manila is 630 miles from the nearest Chinese port, with a freight rate on general merchandise of $4 per ton against her. There must also be added the cost of unloading and reloading the ship at Manila by lighters, as ocean steamers, on account of the shallow water, can not anchor within a mile of that city. With what ridicule would the New Yorker receive the intelligence that English merchants proposed to capture the trade of the United States by establishing large wholesale and jobbing houses at Halifax! Yet it is not so absurd as that we can control the trade of China through Manila. If we want the trade of China, we must seek it at the great seaboard cities of that Empire.

China is anxious to sell us small concessions for trade purposes.

I was told at Canton by the American consul that for $250,000 our Government could obtain a concession, across the river from that city, large enough for all our trade and manufacturing purposes. For years we had a concession at Shanghai extending along the water front for 2 miles. For local governmental purposes it has been included in what is termed the international concession, which is governed by the joint powers having interests there. Although more than 200,000 Chinese live within the international concession they have a voice neither in the government thereof nor as to the imposition of taxes therein. Such a concession, situated near the mouth of the Yangtze, the greatest river in China, running through one of the richest and most extended valleys of the world, is worth more to us for Chinese trade than a hundred Manilas. We have recently acquired rights in international concessions at Amoy and Tientsin, and I hope the good work will continue; Manila, however, is worth nothing to us for controlling Chinese trade.

From whatever view we examine the question, it seems clear that the Philippine Islands can never become of great commercial advantage to us, and will continue to be a source of large expenditure on the part of the National Government.

III. FROM THE MILITARY STANDPOINT.

Mr. Chairman, from the military standpoint I mean, does the annexation of the Philippine Islands strengthen or weaken our nation?

It is related that after the signing of the treaty which ceded the It is related that after the signing of the treaty which ceded the Philippine Islands to the United States, Señor Sagasta, the Spanish prime minister, said: "Now is Spain avenged." How true has this prediction proved. The Philippine Islands have already cost our Government more than $300,000,000, and many of the best of the youth of our land. Their acquisition may transform us from a peaceful into a warlike nation. Victor Cousin was not without reason when he said: "Tell me the geography of a country, and I will tell you its future." I will tell you its future."

Continuous territory is the least vulnerable form of possessions. It is a rule of warfare, as unerring as the instinct of self-interest, that the enemy should always be attacked at its weakest point. We followed that rule in the late war with Spain. We did not engage her upon her home territory because we knew it would require ten times the men and ships to enforce submission. We made our assaults upon her most vulnerable possessions, namely, Cuba and the Philippines, 3,000 and 13,000 miles, respectively, from her base of operations. We attacked her in the two colonies where the people were in open revolt against Spanish tyranny and oppression, and where we knew we should receive coopera-

tion and assistance.

Foreign powers have hitherto hesitated to make war upon us because of the knowledge that, even if successful, they could not permanently hold any of our territory. The rulers of foreign nations knew with certainty that even if they could accomplish the difficult feat of occupying and annexing a portion of our continuous territory the succeeding years would undoubtedly be spent by our nation, as well as by the inhabitants of the annexed territory, in preparing to overthrow the rule of the foreign power. The fear of such a result and the knowledge of the enormous advantage possessed by those who fight in defense of home and country have prevented even the dream of a war of conquest against try have prevented even the dream of a war of conquest against us. The continuity of our territory not only prevents attack, but also enables us to determine at our will when we shall go to war. If we are not ready when the cause arises, we can wait in our impregnable country until we are prepared, as we did just before the late Spanish war. It also gives us the choice of the place of bat-As Mr. Gladstone once said:

The distinction between a continuous empire and one severed and dispersed over the seas is vital.

Sir, with the acquisition of islands 7,000 miles from our shores, how changed becomes the situation! In our first conflict with a European nation the scene of action will be shifted to the Philippines. Our foe will see the importance of attacking our weakest point, and will take advantage of the fact that the people of those islands have recently been in arms against us, knowing full well that where death in such a conflict has embittered so many families the spirit of insurrection will continue for at least a generation. On account of these disadvantages some difficulties with foreign powers are likely to develop into wars, which would probably never have occurred had not the vulnerability of these far-away islands been an allurement to the aggressive spirit of warlike nations.

If we are to retain the Philippines, what must be done to over-come the disadvantage of their situation? We want no such sur-prises as Spain received from us. It becomes necessary to fortify the seaboard cities and towns and to retain in the islands a force sufficient not only to prevent insurrection, but to repel foreign attack. It will be further necessary to nearly double the proper strength of our Navy, so that in case of war we may be able to retain on our own coast the ships essential to our defense, and also to have in the archipelago fleets sufficiently large to meet and successfully engage the enemy. Although the total area of the Philippines is about the same as that of Arizona, it is divided into so many islands that the seacoast to be defended must nearly equal that of all the States bordering upon the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

But what will be the cost of all this? The numerous seaboard cities can not be fortified for less than tens of millions of dollars. The army of occupation scattered among these many islands to prevent foreign aggression and domestic insurrection can not be safely reduced below 30,000 men. The cost of such an army can safely reduced below 30,000 men. The cost of such an army can not be less than $45,000,000 per annum.

The Government expends about $3,000,000 for the building of each battle ship, and a large amount each year to repair it, although after fifteen or twenty years it will become antiquated and useless. Sir, the great wealth and development of our country have arisen from the fact that we have had peace, and that we have not been compelled to impose a constant tax on our industries and results to maintain large armies and payies. With our soverpeople to maintain large armies and navies. With our sover-eignty removed from the Philippines, and with our sources of income practically unlimited, we should still be able to pursue our policy of peace and good will without fear of foreign aggression.

THE ARCHIPELAGO OF NO STRATEGIC VALUE TO US.

In view of the situation in China, the Philippine Islands are supposed by some to be of great strategic value to us. It is very improbable that we shall ever have any difficulty with the Chinese, because our interest is identical with theirs, namely, the preservation of the integrity of the Chinese Empire. But even if it were otherwise, why keep soldiers 600 to 1,500 miles from the possible scene of action, with a very limited transport service—and it is suggested, by the way, that this should be sold—when we could place them on our own concession at Shanghai, as the French, Germans, and English have done?

It was in these words that Lord Macaulay so eloquently denied the military advantage of colonies:

There are some who assert that from a military and political point of view the West Indies are of great importance to this country. This is a common but a monstrous misrepresentation. We venture to say that colonial empire has been one of the greatest curses of modern Europe. What nation has it ever enriched? What hat been its fruits? Wars of frequent occurrence and immense cost, fettered trade, lavish expenditure, clashing jurisdiction, corruption in governments, and indigence among the neonle among the people.

Mr. Frederic Harrison, an eminent English writer, has in the following vigorous language showed the weakness of the British Crown colonies:

But an aggregate of dependencies which is forever disturbed and menaced and forever awaiting or forestalling attack, which contributes nothing to the home government in money or men or resources of any kind, is not a strength but an increasing weakness. It must pull down the strongest race that ever trod the earth; and as it pulls them down it will hurry them from one crime to another.

Mr. Chairman, the decision as to whether we are to hold the Philippine Islands involves, therefore, the question whether we are willing to relinquish concentration for diffusion; to exchange are willing to relinquish concentration for diffusion; to exchange land power, our natural strength, as to which we have enormous advantages, for sea power, as to which we have no peculiar advantage; and to give to the enemy in each conflict the choice of weapons, as well as of time and place of battle. With our military power upon land we need neither a large army nor a large navy, and require only light taxation upon the industries and people of the nation, which means prosperity. Exchanging the former power we shall need a new years of a superior to that of for sea power, we shall need a navy equal or superior to that of any warlike nation, and also a large army to sustain the results of any warlike nation, and also a large army to sustain the results of our naval engagements, involving taxation which will so cripple many of our industries that they will be unable to compete for trade in the markets of the world, which means adversity.

Why pursue a course which will weaken the military strength of our nation? Why give up the advantages of a peaceful people for the disadvantages of a warlike people? "They that take the

for the disadvantages of a warlike people? "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." That judgment threatens not man alone, but also every nation that indulges the dream of universal empire.

It seems to me, therefore, that from a military standpoint the acquisition of the Philippines is weakening instead of strengthening to our nation.

CONCLUSIONS.

Mr. Chairman, I have attempted to show that the policy of forcibly annexing and holding the Philippine Islands is a violation of the moral law itself—wrong to the Philippine people, because it deprives them of God-given rights; wrong to our own people, because it makes us inequitable in crushing inalienable rights; wrong to any government we will impose upon them, because it is bound to produce a rule in our interest instead of theirs, and wrong to our own Government, because it destroys the foundation upon which it is built.

I have endeavored to show from the practical aspect— First. That the political difficulties produced by annexation can never be solved with satisfaction either to them or to us. Second. That commercially the islands can never reimburse us for the enormous expenditures required to hold them.

Third. That their retention is weakening instead of strengthening to our military power.

In my judgment the annexation of the Philippine Islands was the most stupendous blunder ever committed in American politics.

We have taken hold of a red-hot poker and the longer we retain it the severer burn we will receive.

It seems to me that each of these positions is well taken. Then why not avoid the terrible consequences to our people and Government of the permanent retention of these islands? Why not recommit this bill to the committee from which it came, with instructions to report a measure promising to the Philippine people structions to report a measure promising to the rimippine people their independence and providing means for helping them estab-lish a government of their own, based upon republican principles? The Spanish war was started for the freedom, liberty, and inde-pendence of the Cubans. Let not its final result be the subjugation, tyranny, and oppression of the Philippine people.

It is said by some that the Filipinos do not want independence.

I do not believe it, but if it were true it should make no difference. It is not for the Filipinos we plead, but for the people of our own country. This question should be determined by what is best for our own Government. We can not give them citizenship without imperiling our civilization. We can not permanently deprive them of citizenship without destroying our republican institutions.

Mr. Chairman, it is said that the people of the United States in the election last year settled the policy of the Government for the future with respect to the Philippines, and that we ought to sub-future with respect to the Philippines, and that we ought to submit to that verdict; that the sentiment in behalf of the same is so strong that he who puts himself in its way will surely go down to defeat.

The election of 1900 did not settle the question. Other principles were involved in that contest. But even if the Philippine policy had been the only question, the result would not have reflected the matured judgment of the American people. The war fever engendered by the Spanish and Philippine wars was then at its height graph to the state of the spanish and Philippine wars was then at its height; such a time is never propitious for conservative action. Peace must rule before reason rules the mind.

But, sir, there are some principles for which a man should be willing to go down to defeat, and the policy of holding the Philippine Islands, in my judgment, involves such a principle. What would the world have thought of Abraham Lincoln if, after the defeat of the Republican party in 1856, he had acquiesced in the result and concluded that the question of slavery had been settled forward. Great moral questions are never settled in one election.

forever? Great moral questions are never settled in one election, nor are they ever definitely determined until they are settled right.

Mr. Chairman, the departure from the fundamental principles of our Government is far-reaching in its consequences. We can not deny to men the right of self-government without in time it affecting not only the morals of our people, but the very form of government under which we live. It was truly said the Republic could not endure half slave and half free, and I believe it can not endure half republic and half empire.

That is the lesson taught us by the history of the republics of old. That was the judgment of all the grand characters of our country from Washington to Lincoln, from Jefferson to Sumner. That was the decision of the Republican party itself in 1860, when it resolved-

That the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence, that governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, is essential to the preservation of our republican institutions.

Our forefathers founded the most benign Government ever established by man. The progress and advancement of its people under its administration have been unequaled in the history of the world. Its example has done more for downtrodden humanity than all the acts of charity since the beginning of time. Its principles of liberty have produced a civilization more splendid than could have been fancied or dreamed.

To jeopardize those principles, in my judgment, would be the most fatal error ever committed by the American people. Others may vote for measures which tend to change the Republic into an empire, but, as for me, I am for the Republic forever and for the empire never. [Great applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the grantlessee.

to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes at my command I can not begin to enter upon a discussion of this

The first thing that impresses one, it seems to me, is the exceedingly short time given for the consideration of a most important and far-reaching piece of legislation. There can hardly be anything truer than that those who have confidence in the soundness thing truer than that those who have confidence in the soundness than the confidence in the soundness that the consideration of t of legislation proposed have no fear of ample discussion of the provisions of what they offer. The old theory of free government is that out of full discussion, out of the free comparison of views some strong and wise, some, of course, weak and unwise—will come in the end the highest wisdom of which the deliberative body is capable. In this theory for a century the people of the American Republic, through their representatives, legislated. We have now arrived at a period in our history when expedition in legislation is esteemed beyond wisdom in legislation; when rapidity of movement is regarded of more importance than wisdom in consideration or justice in decision.

Perhaps no more important measure, no one more far-reaching in its tendencies and consequences, than that now before the House has been presented in many and many a day—in many and many a decade. We are legislating now after the manner of the many a decade. empire. We are moving with the swiftness of armed battalions. We are suppressing debate, we are striking blindly, in stupid confidence, in utter disregard of the rights of American citizenship, the rights of the Filipino, and the rights of the American representative. This body has been adjourned more days than it has been in session since it met two weeks ago. It is not for lack of time that debate upon this most important measure is denied.

How far-reaching it is! Is it such a measure as ever before—barring the little Porto Rican abortion—saw the light in an American Congress, challenged the attention of the American people, threatened the welfare of the American nation? Certainly not. It is a new departure. It is plunging blindly over a precipice; it is sailing, without chart or compass, for an unknown port, upon an unknown sea. Who can tell the effect of this legislation? Who can tell the end of what you are so precipitately beginning? Who can foresee the outcome? Who can promise safety? Who can measure the depths of disaster that may follow from legislation so hasty, so ill-considered, so unusual, so un-American, so tion so hasty, so ill-considered, so unusual, so undemocratic, so unrepublican, so imperialistic?

How well might a little time be devoted to the consideration of such a policy as this! How easily might there be opportunity given the large views to express to express them! Why deny the to all who have views to express to express them! Why deny the right of amendment? Why offer a crude bill to be rushed through by the brutal power of the majority? You should desire legislation sound and good. You have your majority to carry your measures through. If anything can be offered, upon this side or measures through. If anything can be offered, upon this side or upon that side, to better the proposed legislation why exclude it—why cut it off? Why not let us consider it? If your bill is in itself the best that can be evolved by the intelligence of this body you have your majority behind you to pass it.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose the gentleman is aware that this order was by unanimous consent of the body of which he is a member?
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; after the gentleman from New York laid down the law in the committee and said that this is all you can have. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Tennessee will look into the RECORD, he will find that the arrangement with regard to debate was made by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We did not call the yeas and nays, I know. The gentleman will remember that in committee he at first insisted on one day's debate, and afterwards he consented to two

Mr. DE ARMOND. I hope this will not come out of my time.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from New York alludes to what occurred in committee, I will say that the question was asked-

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman himself first introduced what occurred in committee—not I.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Allow me—

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman asked me what time would be allowed for debate. I told him I was in favor of a liberal time; that I did not object to three hours. [Laughter.] That suggestion was regarded as somewhat of a joke; and some other gentleman suggested two days, which I consented to. I came into the House and presented my proposition and the House and presented my presente the House and presented my proposition, and the House consented to it. Some gentleman on the other side asked if that proposition did not cut off amendments. I said plainly, "Yes, sir." And no objection was made. The gentlemen on the other side were not objection was made. The gentlemen on the other side were not cowed down, I hope.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why did not the gentleman agree to a request for a session for to-night? When he makes such a proposition again he will not get unanimous consent. If the gentleman from New York will in the future speak as clearly as he did just now, unanimous consent will not be so readily had.

Mr. DE ARMOND. This is a very interesting diversion; so very interesting that I am sure the time consumed by it will not be taken out of the short time allotted to me.

I do not wonder that the centleman from New York [Mr. Payne]

I do not wonder that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] desires to make some sort of an explanation and to find some sort of an excuse for a most arbitrary and unreasonable proceeding. What might have been done in the way of objecting to unanimous consent or what should have been done is not a question for discussion at this time. I was not here when the time for debate was fixed. It is the fact that the gentleman from New York, by the power of a party majority, was determined to limit debate to a very brief period of time, and would have done so, consent or no

So that whether formal objection should or should not have been made the responsibility for limiting the time of debate the denial to the representatives of the people of an opportunity to discuss and consider this un-American and iniquitous measure-rests with the other side, and not with this side. If not, will the gentleman agree to a unanimous request upon this side for an extension of the time? I am sure everyone upon this side of the House will join in such a request, but of course there is no indication or intimation that the other side will agree to grant it.

Is this wholesome legislation? Who knows what the legisla-

Is this wholesome legislation? Who knows what the legislation is, except in a few of its arbitrary and drastic features? A Philippine tariff bill is made by a Philippine Commission sent over from the United States; and we have the spectacle actually presented here of the representatives of the American people abdicating their high right and power to legislate upon everything concerning which the Congress of the United States can legislate and taking up and swallowing whole, without considera registate and without possibility of digestion, the product of this Philippine Commission, approved by the Secretary of War; legislation under the military power, legislation outside the Constitution, legislation arbitrary and one-sided, legislation of alien for alien, legislation of a handful of strangers from beyond the seas for 10,000,000 people over in the Philippine Islands. Not an item of it to be considered, not a change to be made in it, not a fact to be learned about it—all to be taken in a lump.

And what is to be done in the end? Where is this to lead? Are gentlemen going to maintain permanently a system of colonial government in the Far East?

It was suggested by the eloquent gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grovenor] that the Philippines came to us as one of the necessary results of a war in which our people entered most patriotically and for most lofty purposes. I deny that the acquisition of those islands can be credited to the necessity of war or to any necessity whatever. There was no necessity upon us to take them, and there is no necessity upon us to-day to retain them. [Applause.] We acquired them in folly. We can dispose of them in wisdom. Shall we continue to perpetuate the folly by holding them under despotic power? That is the question.

It will not do to brush all these considerations aside. It will not do to forget current history and start with a proposition that we got the islands out of necessity. We got them in a spasm. We got them without judgment, without consideration, without necessity. We got them without a reasonable prospect of profit or honor to the American people, and we hold them at serious risk to our own institutions, at immense cost in blood and in treasure, and with almost every man in the Philippine Islands longing for liberty and hoping for independence.

How long the war there will last, when an insurrection will break out, and when another insurrection will follow no man can foretell. The retention of the islands under colonial government means a large army and huge expenditures. It means many a green mound in the country churchyard, where the bones of promising boys, sacrificed in the Philippines, are to be laid away. It means many millions of dollars in extra levies of taxes upon American production and citizenship and labor. It means trouble, trouble, trouble—danger along the whole line and all the time.

Yet in two days we rush through this measure, which apparently is the declaration of a policy, which apparently is the beginning of a long reign of the emperor of the Philippines-which apparently is the fixing upon the American people permanently of a burden grievous to be borne.

Where comes to us the honor or profit of such legislation? What have we reaped but pain and expense and sorrow from our possession of the Philippines? Yet gentlemen contend that because we have them, because we hold them at the point of the bayonet, because we are taxing the American people to pay the expenses, because we are maintaining a large army to prevent and suppress insurrections, we must hold them thus forever. It is thoroughly illogical; it is thoroughly un-American; it is thoris thoroughly illogical; it is thoroughly un-American; it is thoroughly unprecedented in our history. How much better it would be if we could turn back to the old principles, to the old philosophy of any party in this country. No party but yours ever has been so bad; no party ever before has gone so far from American principles, has disregarded so grossly American traditions, as to exploit a relief like they much better it would be if we exploit a policy like this. How much better it would be if we could adopt the philosophy of any of the great parties that have lived in this country—any of the great statesmen that have blazed a way of progress for the Republic—and legislate along some of their line

Why not legislate upon the theory of parting with these islands, of allowing the people there to set up and maintain a government for themselves, of aiding them to do it—of making an end of our possessions over there, and with it an end to our troubles and dangers? Why not do that? Why not permit on this bill an opportunity for discussion of such a policy? If that would not do—if gentlemen would not be content with that—how much better it would be to see whether those islands can not be disposed of to some other nation, some country fond of colonial possessions, whose experience and constitution are adapted to the government of an empire? How much better, if such a thing could be, to swap the Philippine Islands for a part of the British possessions in North America, where American citizens could find homes, where the Republic could grow and expand, where the American flag might be planted and maintained in peace forever. [Applause.]

The fact is, in my judgment, that any disposition that can be made of the Philippine Islands is better than their retention. And there are many dispositions that can be made. You seek not to part with them. You seek not to allow the people to govern part with them. You seek not to allow the people to govern themselves. You are apparently indifferent about treasure and life and the Constitution, or at least blind alike to the interests of Filipino and American. You deprive the Filipino of the right of self-government because, you say, he can not govern himself as well as we can govern ourselves or as you can govern him.

For Filipinoland, he can govern himself. A Filipino government by Filipinos for Filipinos would, of course, be far inferior to an American government by American for American government by American for Filipinos would, of course, be far inferior to an American government by Americans for Americans, just as the Filipino is far inferior to the American. And then, for our-selves—and I am selfish enough to look first to the interests of our own country, or to try to do so; to look first to the welfare of our own institutions, and to promote first our own good and the good of other peoples afterwards—how much of evil we could get rid of, how much of danger we could shun, how much of harm we could escape, how much of good we could do, provided we would expend our resources and our energies in developing our own country, to continue this Republic of ours, not only the greatest republic in the world, but to make it the ideal Republic of all the earth and all time, advancing on the lines of true progress through the years and through the ages, instead of frittering away our time and wasting the treasure and sacrificing the lives of our countrymen in the vain quest of empire beyond the ocean. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in a notable address at Ann Arbor, ex-President Harrison closed in these remarkable words:

In conclusion I propose this sentiment: God forbid that the day should ever come when in the American mind the thought of man as a consumer should ever submerge the old American thought of man as a creature of God and endowed with inalienable rights.

This noble and inspiring thought of a distinguished soldier, a profound lawyer, and a pure statesman will fall unheeded upon a party which he once honored, held now in the grip of a sordid commercialism which it dare not shake loose, if it would, and which bids it to pass this un-American, unjust, hasty, and wholly indefensible measure.

Ostensibly the bill is to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, but its true purpose and meaning is only thinly veiled by its title. Instead of a bill "temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," it should read, "A bill to fasten the protective tariff and its resultant system of trusts more securely upon the American people, and for no other purpose."

Opposed as we are to the general tariff law as applied to foreign countries, as being grossly unjust both to the American consumer and producer, we are in still greater measure opposed to its application to any part of our own territory. We can not assent to the doctrine that any part of American territory, wherever situate, is foreign to the American laws and Constitution. It is little wonder that statesmen belonging to different schools of political thought should deplore the departure as contemplated by this bill from well-established historical precedents and rules for governmental action. Well may the American people pause at the rapid assaults made upon constitutional government and the repeated efforts to graft the offshoot of monarchy on the fair tree of the Republic.

The Supreme Court in its latest decision, known as the "Four-teen Diamond Rings case," holds that importations from the archi-pelago to the United States are not dutiable, because the islands are American territory and not foreign under the treaty of Paris. Congress now proposes to make them foreign by passing this measure, relying upon the majority of one. The court seems to measure, relying upon the majority of one. The court seems to have no difficulty in determining what is and what is not American territory until Congress passes a tariff law, and then by a clear majority of one it may be relied upon to reverse its decision and to declare as foreign that which it had before declared as domestic. The question which lovers of liberty and constitutional govern-The question which lovers of floerty and constitutional government will ask is, What shall be the end of it all? For, if Congress should see fit to place a tax upon all goods from Oklahoma or New Mexico entering the States of the Union, such a law, if precedent is followed, would be declared constitutional by a majority of one.

Some of the American people who have been in the habit of supposing they were an inseparable part of the Republic would be made to realize their error, and those wonderful countries clamoring for space on the flag for two more stars to represent sovereign States would see their high hopes perish, as they would be inadmissible to the Union by a majority of one. All honor to those judges who have refused to follow the devious and perilous windings of these opinions, and who have declared that no tariff bill passed by Congress can amend the Constitution of the United States or alienate one foot of American soil. But in submitting to a decision giving Congress absolute authority over our new possessions, and making its will the supreme law of the land, we shall still insist that it shall not be used except in fairness and moderation—with due regard to the rights of our own people and

The rights of the islanders who have involuntarily been brought under our dominion and control. [Applause.]

We insist that the tariff schedule prepared by the Philippine Commission should not be validated by Congressional action, for commission should not be validated by Congressional action, for it is less flexible and more prohibitory than that of any other enlightened colony-holding nation of the world. We insist, if we must keep the archipelago, that its products shall enter our ports free of duty and that absolute free trade shall prevail between the United States and all her possessions, and we demand it, whether the protected interests of this country are injured or not, as the only true rule of right between a nation and its colonies. Or, if free trade shall not prevail, we demand that an autonomous government be erected, so that the islanders may say what, if any, the tariff rates shall be on goods which enter their ports; or, if this be denied, and the schedule prepared by the Philippine Commission should be made effective by Congress, and the revenue thus derived is to be expended for the benefit of the people on the on the islands, we then insist that on principles of common justice they should have a part in determining how this revenue should be expended, which the proposed measure denies them. [Applause.] So far as the importations from the Philippine Islands into the United States are concerned, the Dingley tariff law, which this bill proposes to apply to the productions of the islands, places a prohibitive duty upon hemp, tobacco, and sugar, which constitute their most valuable commodities, and we protest against it as the worst form of a medicard scalar large and sugar to the scalar large and the scalar large and sugar to the scalar large and sugar the scalar large and scalar large and sugar the scalar large and scalar lar worst form of a mediæval colonial policy—an affront to the moral sense of mankind as well as antagonistic to the just laws of trade. Thus does the alluring picture vanish which the Republican party drew of the trade advantages which this country would enjoy with these possessions, and thus by the operation of this bill are the ports of both the United States and the Philippine Islands closed the one against the other.

The work of legislation for these islands, Mr. Chairman, should not begin with this wrong, which all the military force we may send against them will never undo. It is a breach of international good faith and places our country in a position where not only may its declarations be questioned by foreign powers, but only may its declarations be questioned by foreign powers, but invites discrimination and prohibition on their part against American trade. We demand the open door to China, but close our own to ourselves and to all the world. It places us in the front rank of selfish, grasping nations and fixes upon the Republic with a written Constitution, every word of which is a living protest against this measure, the odious system of coercive monarchies. For one I am not willing to thus surrender the honor of the Republic to the demands of the protected favorites of government who are clamoring for the passage of this bill.

who are clamoring for the passage of this bill.

When we govern a willing people by our own system of laws and apply the rules of conduct to them by which we are governed, and do not tax them without representation, we have the true type of republicanism. When we govern an unwilling people by different laws, and apply to them different rules of conduct and tax them without representation, we have the methods of the

When we are told that the revenue to be derived will be used for the benefit of the Philippine Islands, we quote the language of John Jay, the first Chief Justice of the United States, in his eloquent appeal to the people of Great Britain, in which he protested against taxation without representation:

These and many other impositions were laid upon us most unjustly and unconstitutionally for the express purpose of raising a revenue. In order to silence complaint it was, indeed, provided that this revenue should be expended in America for its protection and defense. These exactions, however, can receive no justification from a pretended necessity of protecting and defending us.

Thus are the high scenes in the Parliament of England when the wrong against the Colonies was consummated transferred to the floor of the American Congress, to the burning shame of the Republic.

When we are informed that a contract to clear the harbor at Manila has been awarded at the cost of $3,000,000, we ask why it was that a Republican Congress last year failed to appropriate one dollar for American rivers and harbors? When claims of necessity are made for the expenditure of enormous sums in a remote country, in a state of outlawry, and among a people who can never become American citizens, we point to that great river which at times gathers the waters of a continent and bears on its mighty tide the wraith of the dreaded flood. We ask you to look upon the map of your country and there find in the lowlands of the South a soil rich beyond compare and capable of the highest excellence and development. We beg you to remember that these lands of measureless value belong to sov-

If used at all they will be for military purposes only, and we are opposed to the military road in the Philippine Islands just as we were to the military roads of Spain in Cuba and Porto Rico by which that ancient monarchy sought to sustain her despotic sway. When it is asserted that the revenue derived from this bill is to be used for the education of the Filipinos, we answer that no tropical race has ever been or ever will be educated out of its heredity and environment. When it is urged as a reason for the passage of this bill that 4,000 school-teachers have recently been recently dear that the islanders degreed the trade and employed, we answer that the islanders demand free trade and not free teachers.

We direct the attention of the country to the enormous sums to be expended in this doubtful experiment of education and denied to the 8,000,000 or more of ignorant blacks at home, who could at least be taught the industrial arts, and whom the Southern people are taxing themselves to educate without governmental aid and often to their sore distress

The Republican party placed this heavy burden upon the South, which has contributed so much to the glory and honor of the Republic.

We have heard much of the new South. I deny that there is such a thing as the new South.

It is the same old South who gave a Jefferson to state American liberties and a Washington to achieve them. It was the old South who strewed your flag thick with stars of sovereign States. It is the same old South who parted with the Union for just cause and came back at Appomattox in good faith, but without

Representing, as we think, the true American policy, we still revere the Declaration of Independence which the Republican party has spat upon and relegated to the lumber room of useless things. Holding fast to the Constitution which has safeguarded us through every peril and pointed the way for the feet of liberty-loving men to walk hitherto untrodden heights of glory, we again enter our protest against the passage of this measure. [Applause.]

Here we plant our standard and refuse to yield one principle in the firm establishment of human rights or forget the lofty story of American independence. The flag is spoken of as if we were its enemies. The intimation is untrue. I revere that symbol as the highest and holiest earthly emblem, and whether on land or sea it commands the respect of the nations of the world. But it is because I do that I never want to see it wave except in honor. is because I do that I never want to see it wave except in honor. Wherever it is raised I would have liberty and the blessing of self-government shaken from its folds, and I would furl it forever in every land where it stands as the physical sign of American sovereignty, if the Constitution, the soul and spirit of the Republic, could not follow it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I believe the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] desires to be recognized.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to indulge in platitudes, but simply to make a few plain statements of the case as it applies to my constituency and the interests of my State.

The bill under consideration provides that the goods and merchandise coming from the Philippines into this country shall pay duty under the provisions of the present tariff law. It provides further that all goods and merchandise entering the Philippines from all countries shall pay duty in accordance with the rates established by the Philippine Commission tariff and that goods and merchandise from the United States to the Philippines shall pay the rates of the Commission's kill pay the rates of the Commission's bill.

Congress on March 2, 1901, enacted what is called the "Spooner amendment." This is the only expression yet had by Congress upon the question of civil government in the Philippine Islands. While it has been extremely unsatisfactory, yet much has been done under it by the Commission provided for in its terms. The amendment reads:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1809, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person or persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Acting under this authority the President of the United States appointed a Commission which has since, under his direction, attempted to bring about the establishment, as far as practicable, of civil government in the archipelago. It was by and under this authority that the act of the Commission regulating tariff duties in the islands was perfected and promulgated. Before, however, it was put into practical operation the Supreme Court of the United States, on the 2d of December of this year, declared that the Philippine Islands was territory of the United States. This, without further action on the part of Congress, meant that the present tariff laws of the United States extended over the Philippine Islands. It has become necessary, therefore, for Congress either to permit the conditions to remain as they are by the decisions of the court, or to act within its powers under the Constitution, lately determined by the court in the insular cases, and enact a tariff law which would meet the conditions existing in these islands and to raise sufficient revenue to meet the expenses Acting under this authority the President of the United States these islands and to raise sufficient revenue to meet the expenses necessary to support the people of them, in an effort to prepare them for self-government

Under the plan embarked upon by the military establishment Under the plan embarked upon by the mintary establishment and the Commission, it is necessary to provide some means for paying the expenses incident upon our occupation. There is no longer a question that Congress has this power. It is therefore only a question what policy is best to pursue in the premises. The Ways and Means Committee of the House have reported the present bill, which in one of its sections adopts the schedules of the Philippine Commission tariff, which it is considered will reject these expenses.

raise revenue to meet these expenses.

Section 4 of the bill requires that all duties and taxes collected in the Philippine Archipelago in pursuance of the act shall be held as a separate fund and paid into the treasury of the Philippine Islands, to be used and expended for the government and benefit of the islands.

It will therefore be perceived that these people who pay these taxes will receive the benefit of every dollar collected.

The policy to be pursued under the operations of this bill in The pointy to be pursued under the operations of this bill in revenue matters, should it become a law, meets with my approval. The question is whether we must look ultimately to granting the Philippine Islands the right to establish an independent government of their own, or whether we shall continue to hold them for many years to come as a territory of the United States to be finally admitted into the Union as a State or States upon equal footing with the other States of this Union. For my part I shall never cost my vote either as an American citizen as a Paragraph. cast my vote, either as an American citizen or as a Representative upon this floor, to do any act by which we may cause the people of the islands to believe that they may at any time hope to people of the islands to believe that they may at any time hope to come into this great Union.

But I am strongly in favor in the future of providing such a policy as will sever them from us completely, by assisting them in forming an independent government. The expression of this opinion as to the future of these people may be considered harsh to them, but the more I have read of their history the more I am convinced that we can never afford to prepare to admit them into the Union in the future and give to them finally all the privileges of American citizenship, which they could never understand or appreciate.

The Senate, shortly after the ratification of peace with Spain, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, etc., That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands. (Cong. Rec., 5th Cong., 3d sess., vol. 32, p. 1847.)

While it may not have had the force and effect of law, being a resolution, it did give due notice to the people of these islands resolution, it did give due notice to the people of these islands what relations the people of the United States could bear to them in the future. While I do not fully agree with the policy outlined in this resolution, I shall in the future act upon those lines which for the best interests of the United States will grant the islands their independence. I believe that the sober mind of the American people when concentrated upon this serious question will unite in forcing this policy to grant independence.

It is hard for me to conceive that within any reasonable period of time it would be possible to elevate the heterogeneous conditions of the people inhabiting the archipelago to that high standard of citizenship which we have reached in this great Republic. The citizenship which we have reached in this great Republic. The amalgamation of Oriental people with the people of this Union can have but one effect, and that is to produce weeful deterioration in Christian and political morality. Too much treasure and blood have already been expended in the establishment of our present magnificent Republic, and I for one am loath to take a step which would bring upon us the solution of greater problems than these which have yet here presented to us those which have yet been presented to us.

We have been informed that peace has been established in the islands, and that only guerrilla warfare to a limited extent exists there. This seems to me to be the expression of hope rather than the announcement of the truth of the facts. The conditions of peace are maintained at present by a military establishment of between forty and fifty thousand soldiers and the expenditure of millions of money. Each day transports bear from the Philipminons of money. Each day transports bear from the Philippines to this country the bodies of brave American youths whose lives have been sacrificed during this peaceful occupation. If this be not warfare, then by what name can we designate it? If this be peace, then what would we call warfare?

Spain held these islands for over four hundred years, and waged a continuous warfare with their people. The United States troops have been in possession for nearly three years, and to-day, from the dispatches received by the press of this country, eternal conflict seems to be waged, in parts, at least, of many if not all of these islands. At what time under these circumstances could these people ever be fit for or worthy of American citizenship? If we are to judge the future by the history of the past, I believe that the universal answer will be "Never."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I hope the gentleman will not call me off from the line of my remarks.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is just exactly in the line of the gentleman's statement.

gentleman's statement.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Very well.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Filipinos are now being taught by American officials to believe that they have the right to be made into a State of this Union, and they expect to be immediately admitted as a State of the American Union.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Of course I do not agree with any graph representation and I regree years much to hear that with any such proposition, and I regret very much to hear that it is being made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are being taught that.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I can not agree to that, of Feeling convinced, therefore, that we can never admit these people into the United States, and believing that our task will be hopeless in our effort to fit them for our institutions, I think it will be conceded that occupying the attitude I do I could take no other position upon this bill, the principles of which, when applied in full, mean different treatment to them than that accorded to any other people inhabiting territory belonging to the United States.

The operations of this bill put the Philippine Islands upon the same footing, so far as our customs laws are concerned, as that which is occupied by every foreign nation having commercial relations with us. relations with us.

If we fail to pass this bill, under the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Pepke, or Diamond Rings case, the operations of the customs laws of this country will be extended to these people. They will be accorded equal rights with the rest of the territory belonging to the United States. I believe that upon the threshold of this question we should pass this bill and serve notice upon the country will be said to the District Landa that they want proper for their people in the Philippine Islands that they must prepare for their own independence, as it is clear to them by its passage that we do not intend to accord to them equal rights under these laws and others which are now applicable to all the people of the United States. [Applause.]

We do not believe that the people of these islands can be made citizens of our Republic without gross injustice to our people, and without doing vio-lence and perhaps an irreparable injury to our institutions; nor can we hold them as subjects without the most radical changes in our form and theory

These words express my views as to our future policy. But it seems to me that the failure of the passage of this bill, which would place the archipelago in the same relation to us as that of other territory which we are preparing for statehood, would lead them to believe it was our intention in the future to confer upon them all of the privileges which may accrue to the other Territories.

Would it not be best to notify them now that they can not expect such treatment, but that we will in the future do all in our power to accord to them independence and their own govern-ment? Until this can be done, and as the exigencies of the case ment? Until this can be done, and as the exigencies of the case demand immediate action, I am convinced that the principles expressed in these words in the minority report can best be brought about by the notice which the passage of this bill will give the Filipinos, that they may have no hope in the future of becoming incorporated into the United States.

The report of the minority, quoting from the Secretary of War upon the question of imports and exports, dwelt to some extent upon the pancity of trade both as to imports and exports of the oon the paucity of trade both as to imports and exports of the Philippine Islands last year. They minimize the importance of the productive and commercial power of these islands. Without a further investigation into the question of the conditions which have and will obtain in the islands under a different state of affairs, it is clear to my mind that the agricultural resources of these islands will, under circumstances of peace or partial peace, astound us in the future.

After a careful view of the productions and capabilities of the After a careful view of the productions and capabilities of the islands, as shown by the report of the Philippine Commission, I am struck with the tremendous possibilities of the agricultural resources in them. Particularly do I believe, from the experience of increased trade in other tropical countries which have been afforded the protection and have been developed by American capital under peaceful conditions, that the same rule applied to these islands would produce the same result, and that I must view with alarm, as a Representative from Louisiana, the effect of free trade between the Philippines and this country.

In less than ten years after the adoption of the reciprocity treaty with these islands the amount of sugar imported into this country from them had increased 1,300 per cent.

All of this will be plainly shown by the following table of imports from the Hawaiian Islands during the operation of the reciprocity treaty, which ended with our acquisition of these islands, since which period the sugar industry there has wonderfully increased.

Within ten months during the year 1901, including the month of October, the Hawaiian Islands had produced 645,092,392 pounds of october, the Hawahan Islands had produced $45,025,392 points of sugar, which, at the same percentage of increase for the other two months of the year, will in all probability bring it up to 750,000,000 pounds. The sugar production of Hawaii, under the stimulating influences of free trade and American thrift, has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of those engaged in the industry there is the production of the property of the production of the product industry there. It behooves us, therefore, in Louisiana, to take warning from this remarkable history and prepare in time, if in our power, to protect ourselves against like condition in the Philippine Islands, which must come to them under the same freetrade policy with them. We should not be deceived by the report of the officers of this Government, or take into account importations and exportations at this time, but to take our stand now and look to the future as being fraught with imminent danger

Should we lie quietly at this time and permit free trade with the Philippine Islands on the ground that the production of sugar at this moment is inconsequential, we will be awakened in a short time to the stern realities of the situation when it is too late. But with the facts and figures before us of the advance in the sugar production during free trade and reciprocity in the Ha-waiian Islands, it seems to me that it is imperatively necessary to raise our voice in opposition to the pursuit of the same policy with the Philippines.

The last report of the Philippine Commission says:

The last report of the Philippine Commission says:

Agriculture is in its infancy here, and the tools and machinery in use are, for the most part, crude in the extreme. While there are some steam sugar mills in Luzon and Negros, yet the machinery employed is out of date when compared with that in use in the Hawaiian Islands. In very many instances cane is still crushed between stone or wooden rollers turned by draft animals. If sugar can be advantageously grown and marketed with such machinery and methods as are at present employed, it is certain that profits would be enormously increased were thoroughly modern machinery and methods to be introduced.

For the successful cultivation of large sugar estates, steam plows must be employed in considerable numbers. The sugar land is admirably adapted for their use, being for the most part level and free from stones. The water buffalo, which is at present used for plowing, is a very unsatisfactory sort of draft animal at the best, while the mortality among buffaloes from rinderpest has recently reached from 60 to 50 per cent of the total number in many provinces. Other epidemics of rinderpest in the past have produced similar or worse results. In many provinces the people have been unable to plant their crops during the present season through lack of draft animals for plowing, and, were steam plows available now, their owners might make handsome profits by breaking up land at a fixed price per acre.

The plows now in common use are wretched affairs, and the harrows are little better. Such things as our disk harrows, horse cultivators, etc., are entirely unknown. There are no good hoes to be had in the islands, the implements in common use being more like adzes.

Native planters are already more or less alive to the necessity of portable tramways for bringing cane to their crushers, and some of the more important sugar plantations have them, but there will be need of many more.

The Filipinos are to a considerable extent an imitative people. Were modern implements and s

In the year 1900 the British consul at Manila, in speaking of the conditions of the sugar industry in the Philippine Islands, says:

Exports are also suffering from the continuance of war-like operations in the provinces, owing to the insecurity of life in many of the sugar-producing districts. Owners of property have not in many instances been able to visit their estates and therefore plant crops, the consequence being that in this (Visaya) district the arrivals of sugar are trifling compared with those of past years.

Mr. John Forman, in his work The Philippine Islands, on page 308, says:

The finest sugar-cane producing island in the archipelago is Negros, in the Visaya district, between north latitudes 9° and 11°. The area of the island is about equal to that of Porto Rico, but for want of capital is only about one-half opened up. Nevertheless, it sent to the Hollo market in 1892 over 115,000 tons of raw sugar.

In 1893, in addition to the amount of sugar consumed in the Philippine Islands, they exported 523,000,000 pounds. There are no statistics as to the amount of sugar consumed, but it may be estimated that a large quantity of it was used to supply the demands of the people in the islands. From these figures it can easily be seen that under the most adverse circumstances sureasily be seen that under the most adverse circumstances surrounding the production of sugar, with crude instruments and the crudest machinery, the Philippine Islands produced more sugar in that year than was produced by the Hawaiian Islands in 1899, under free trade with the United States and most improved machinery and appliances. Think, then, of the wonderful possibilities of production there even under unfavorable circumstances. In 1900 there were imported into this country for consumption 4,018,086,530 pounds of sugar. The domestic production was 500,046,450 pounds, from cane and beet, making the total consumed in the United States in 1900, 4,518,132,980 pounds. These figures are taken from the Statistical Abstract, 23d number, 1900.

If the same conditions were applied to the Philippine Islands which came to the Hawaiian Islands under reciprocity and free which came to the Hawahan Islands under reciprocity and free trade, within a few years these islands could produce almost three times the quantity consumed in the United States. With this condition of affairs the sugar industry in the United States would be completely destroyed. In these calculations no reference is made to reciprocity with Cuba. In the census of Cuba it is stated by General Wood that with the development of the sugar industry to a reasonable extent, under favorable conditions, could produce enough sugar to supply the world. These facts forcibly present themselves to me in the consideration of this bill, and I can not bring myself to believe that we should ever have free trade with the Philippine Islands or reciprocity with Cuba.

The failure of this bill would mean free trade with the Philippine Islands. To establish this policy now would fix forever our relations with those islands. A Representative from Louisiana can not use the argument that because the sugar industry is at present crushed on account of the unstable conditions in the islands resulting from the waging of continued guerrilla warfare, that there is no danger in the near future to us from these islands. We are brought face to face with the facts in the Hawaiian case, and it will not do to say that by voting against this bill we can afford to vote for free trade, because the bill will, in all probability, pass without our votes. I believe that we should assume the honest position, and say that if this bill was in danger of defeat we would cast our votes for it.

No Democratic House has ever passed a free-trade bill; no Democratic minority has ever prepared a general free-trade measure. The rates of the Wilson bill were in many instances as high as those in the McKinley law. The rates in the Mills bill, which passed a Democratic House, were in many instances higher than the rates in the McKinley law. the rates in the McKinley law. If the action of the party in the future will be governed by its history in these matters, there will not be a time when the Democratic party would ever propose or pass a measure establishing the principles of free trade. My contention is that the Philippine Islands should never be admitted

We should, acting under our constitutional powers, put them We should, acting under our constitutional powers, put them upon a different footing from other territory acquired in the Spanish war, and finally get rid of them forever. If it had been in my power to amend the bill on the matter of rates, the propositions presented would have been more in keeping with my views. But between the bare question of no tariff at all and the rates in this bill, my duty from my conviction demands that I should cast my vote without fear or equivocation on this measure. I do not believe that there is a member from Louisian who would you for a bill to put sugar on the free list, yet a failure to would vote for a bill to put sugar on the free list, yet a failure to vote for this means exactly that and nothing else in so far as our relations with the Philippine Islands are concerned.

The history of the rice industry in the United States in its advance, extension, and possibilities, has been equal to that of the sugar industry in the Hawaiian Islands under free trade. It has developed with such rapidity that the production of rice now in the United States can almost meet the demands for home consumption. But as this point is being reached, those interested in the industry are casting about to see how it would be possible to get rid of the surplus which may in a short time present itself as a serious question.

The Crop Reporter, a journal published under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, in its June number, 1901, contains the most recent data obtainable upon the rice industry in the United States. It appears from the statistics given there that the rice industry will soon be confronted with the question of surplus.

THE UNITED STATES RICE TRADE,

There are many indications of the approach of a new era in rice production in the United States. For the last thirty years rice has been the one cereal of extensive use of which this country has produced an insufficiency for domestic needs. Lately, however, the area in rice is being enlarged, notably in Louisiana and Texas. Production in the rice-growing belt is gaining on national consumption, and an approaching change in the existing relation between domestic supply and demand is already being anticipated by commercial efforts to increase the uses, and thereby the consumption, of rice in this country, and even by suggestions of the possible need of foreign markets in the near future for a prospective surplus.

The average yearly consumption of cleaned rice in the United States for the past ten years has been not far from 250,000,000 pounds and the average production about 150,000,000 pounds, leaving a net annual average of about 100,000,000 pounds to be supplied by importation. In the last year of the decade, however, there were indications of a decided increase in both domestic consumption and production, and also of a significant lessening in the difference between them. Apparently the consumption of rice in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, amounted to upward of 275,000,000 pounds; the production in the same year was about 220,000,000 pounds—or, in the fiscal year 1899-1900, the production of rice in the United States was only about 55,000,000 pounds short of supplying the domestic needs.

The exports of rice from the United States are small and consist mostly of foreign rice brought into this country for reexport. Exports of domestic rice have at no time within the past ten years amounted to so much as 10 per cent of the total exports, excepting in 1900, when they constituted upward of 40 per cent of the trade.

The following statement gives the exports of domestic and foreign rice separately and the total exports for the past ten years: Exports of rice from the United States.

The question is, How will the passage of this bill affect the rice industry? Statistics show that the Philippine Islands are now importeres of rice. The rice imported comes, for the greater part from China and Hongkong. It is a question whether part, from China and Hongkong. It is a question whether, on account of the fact that rice produced in these countries by the cheapest labor and inexpensive farming utensils and machinery, the United States could ever control the market in the Philippines on this question. The matter of the great distance of these islands and the heavy cost of transportation would also add as elements in the obstacles to be encountered in controlling this trade.

This, however, is not the serious question. If the rice production in this country should ever reach the positive point of over-production, we can not look to the Philippine Islands for any re-lief. It is certain that the conditions which have held back the development of the agricultural resources in the islands will, with the establishment of peace, disappear, and the rice industry, like that of the sugar industry, will forge forward with such strides that the Philippine Islands will soon export rice, and therefore become a competitor in the markets of the world with our domestic production. I believe that vast opportunities are open to the production of rice to those who shall engage in its produc-tion in the Philippine Islands. Professor Knapp, in his report of rice production in the United States, makes this statement:

The outlook for the future of rice cultivation in the Philippines is bright. The lands suitable for rice culture are of considerable extent. It ought to be a matter of a dozen years or less * * * to turn the tide from an annual importation of 150,000,000 to a considerable export. There is already a large market for the product. It is the cheapest and most common food of the oriental peoples, and following a peaceful settlement of the difficulties there there will undoubtedly be a steady increase in the home demand for this product. What is wanted is such an application of modern methods to rice growing in the Philippines as the natural conditions there may admit.

The history of rice production in the Philippines shows that at one time they were exporters of rice. But under the restrictions placed upon commerce by the illiberal Spanish policy and the obstacles surrounding its exportation, the people of the islands soon lost interest in the industry, and instead of exporters they became importers of rice. But, in my opinion, the future will make it a great competitor in the matter of rice production with our country in the markets of the world.

Under the treaty of Paris we were to grant Spain equal commercial advantages with us in our trade with the Philippine Islands for ten years. If we should fail to pass this bill on account of the proximity of Spain to the islands and her acquaintance with the people and their methods, she would control this market. How she would obtain rice it is easy to discern.

Of one thing I am thoroughly convinced, and that is that under no condition could we hope to compete with China and Hong-kong in the matter of rice supply to these islands, both on account, as I have stated before, of the cheap labor existing in account, as I have stated before, of the cheap labor existing in them and the distance and heavy charges of transportation which are necessarily placed upon commerce going from this country to the Philippine Islands. If we should have free trade with the Philippine Islands, rice imported from foreign countries into those islands could be easily exported to us. As we are near-ing the period of overproduction and are casting about for a field for this industry, I deem it pertinent upon this occasion to place the facts before those who may be interested in the culture of rice and rice production in the United States.

And now, Mr. Chairman, in summing up the statements which I have made in my reasons for reaching the conclusion to support this bill, I do now state, first, that I am opposed to admitting the Philippine Islands upon equal footing with other Territories and States of this Union and am therefore in favor of this measure, which puts them in a different attitude from that occupied by which puts them in a different attitude from that occupied by any other territory of the United States; secondly, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, had since the passage of the Porto Rican bill, I feel that Congress has power to enact legislation of the character of that which this bill carries; third, and probably for the greater reason, I feel that the interest of my State and district would be jeopardized by the failure of the passage of this bill. Being thoroughly convinced from my investito be printed.

gation of the situation that such would be the case, I shall cast my vote according to these convictions. In my opinion, the fail-ure of the passage of this bill and the establishment of reciprocity with Cuba, which is threatened now, would completely annihilate the sugar industry, at least in the State of Louisiana.

There is no other matter for consideration before us; no proposition, amendment, or resolution has been submitted by the minority. There has been no caucus upon this question. I do not believe that I am breaking with my party, because I hold the same views that they do in regard to the future conduct of these islands. The difference between me and them is only on the question of exigency which presents itself to me to-day. I will never vote for free sugar; I shall never vote for any tariff bill that will propose it. I believe firmly that the passage of this bill is best for my constituents. Not only that, but I believe the failure of this bill to pass will be disastrous to the sugar interests of Louisiana in the future. I shall therefore cast my vote for this proposition. oposition. [Loud applause.] Mr. PAYNE. I move that proposition.

I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hepburn, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

House joint memorial No. 2. The thirty-fourth legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico to the Congress of the United States.

Territory of New Mexico to the Congress of the United States.

Whereas it is the established policy of the General Government to aid in the development of education in every State and Territory by grants of public lands for educational purposes; and

Whereas it is the special policy at the present time to promote education in our new possessions by liberal assistance from the General Government; and

Whereas New Mexico ever since her acquisition by the United States, more than half a century ago, has fully shown, both in war and peace, her loyalty to the Union and her devotion to the general welfare of the people, and established her right to equal and just consideration with all the States and other possessions; and than haif a century ago, has fully shown, both in war and peace, her loyalty to the Union and her devotion to the general welfare of the people, and established her right to equal and just consideration with all the States and other possessions; and

Whereas New Mexico has a very large rural population, sharing the common need of all for universal education; and

Whereas the valuation of the vast arid tracts of land in New Mexico is so small as to produce but scant revenues for the support of public education, making the universal education of the people almost an impossible problem under present conditions; and

Whereas every acre of land given from the public domain for the support of education in such commonwealths as Oklahoms or Nebraska is fully equivalent in revenue-producing power to 10 acres in New Mexico; and

Whereas the remaining lands not already included in the numerous land and railroad grants. Indian and military reservations, and Government entries are of such a character that they are not and, in the very nature of things, never can produce revenues for educational purposes at all proportionate to those produced by the educational lands of the States unless the acreage be vastly greater.

Therefore, we, your petitioners, the thirty-fourth legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, recognizing the urgent need of the people for greater and better educational facilities and recognizing the exceedingly small revenue-producing value of the public lands of New Mexico as compared with those of almost every other commonwealth in the Union, do earnestly ask the attention of Congress to this matter, and to seriously pray that in addition to what has already been granted there shall be given for the common schools not less than four sections, or their equivalents, in each township throughout the Territory, and also not less than 5 per cent of the proceeds of all sales of public lands made subsequent to this donation;

That for the University of New Mexico, the College of Agriculture and Mechanic

Joint memorial No. 5, of the people of the Territory of New Mexico, through their Thirty-fourth legislative assembly, to the Congress of the United States, for the admission of the Territory as a State of the Union.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The people of the Territory of New Mexico, through your memorialist, their Thirty-fourth legislative assembly, now in session at Santa Fe, respectfully demand that the Congress of the United States pass, at the earliest moment possible, an enabling act whereby they may form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States and in that behalf respectfully represent:

That they have an inherent right to such admission, by virtue of the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence.

That such form of government was guaranteed to them by the solemn decaration of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, more than fifty-three years ago.

That both of the great political parties of the nation promised in their last national platforms that New Mexico should be admitted as a State without delay.

That the people of the Territory are ready and anxious for such admission, both great political parties in the Territory having so declared in their last Territorial platforms; and further they ask admission because

A Territorial form of government is intolerable to a free people; it is an incongruity under American institutions, and should be maintained only so long as absolutely necessary to prepare its people for the higher form; and because incongruity under American institutions, and should be maintained only so long as absolutely necessary to prepare its people for the higher form; and because

It is taxation without representation; it is a denial of the right of the people to take part in the affairs of the nation, as they have no vote in Congress and never take part in the policies of their country or in the election of its Chief Magistrate, and are never appointed to any office in the nation outside of the limits of the Territory itself, save in the Army in time of war; and Because the people in a Territory are not free for various reasons; among others, their legislative hands being tied by restrictive acts of Congress; because the national platforms of both great political parties are continually violated, and because what ought to be our patrimony—the public domain—is often disposed of absolutely and the proceeds turned into the National Treasury, and restrictive and annoying regulations are made regarding the public lands that are wrong in principle and hard to get corrected, and because Congress nearly always turns a deaf ear to the just demands of a Territory; and

Because the people of the nation have no confidence in a Territorial form of government and refuse to invest their money therein, thus retarding its growth and development; and

Because for more than half a century we have been neglected by the nation, which has done nothing for the education of our people, although they needed it quite as bad in the beginning as do the Porto Ricans and other new possessions that are not thus being treated; and

Because the Territory of New Mexico has for half a century paid tribute to the National Government through the sales of public lands, mining entries, timber sales, internal revenue, etc., to an amount vastly in excess of any sums of money ever received in return for all purposes combined; but

New Mexico demands statehood because she has shown her right to it in sending more soldiers to the defense of the country per capita in the civ

Because it has within its boundaries property easily of the value of upwards of $100,000,000, that will be available to tax for the support of a State government; and

Because it has made more educational progress in the last decade than any other part of the nation, without any exception, and has now a better system of common schools, per capita, than any other State or Territory, and Supports more and better public institutions (all built at its own expense, when the National Government ought to have built them, we still being a Territory), among which institutions may be mentioned a capitol building, a university, a school of mines, an agricultural college and experiment station, a normal university, and another fine normal school, a military institute, an insane asylum, and a penitentiary, besides several fine hospitals, a deaf and dumb asylum, and many minor institutions; and

Because it has within its boundaries not less than fifteen cities and towns that are modern, up-to-date places in every respect, and that are far in advance of places in the Eastern States of equal size, and this without disparaging the many other towns and villages within its boundaries, and all of which cities and most of which towns support and have buildings in which to maintain as fine a system of public schools as exists anywhere west of the Central States, or, in fact, anywhere in the whole nation; and

Because the people of the Territory are a conservative, law-abiding people, more than 90 per cent of them being born American citizens, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States; and

Because in more than twelve Congresses of the United States the fitness of the people of New Mexico for a State government has been fully investigated, and bills passed in one House or both for the admission of the Territory, all of which failed to become a law through one mishap or another, until now more than half a century has passed and the Territory has arrived at its present advanced condition all through its own un

Be it resolved by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico,
That the foregoing memorial be, and the same hereby is, adopted and that the secretary of this Territory be, and he hereby is, requested to certify copies thereof to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the sitting Delegate and the gate-elect.

President of the Council.

Chief Clerk of the Council,

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Della C. Healy, for amount due her as widow of John J. Healy, late a messenger of the United States Senate, being a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and sall other allowances. all other allowance

The amendments were, in line 3, to strike out the words "for amount due her as;" and in line 4, after the word "Senate," to strike out the word "being;" so as to read:

Della C. Healy, widow of John J. Healy, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I offer a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

A new committee has been raised, the Select Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures, and there is no provision for paying its clerk. But there is an appropriation out of which he may be paid, so it is not necessary that the resolution should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. There is already a regular appropriation out of which he can be paid.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures be authorized to appoint a clerk at an annual salary of $1,800, and the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the same from the appropriation for "Salaries, officers and employees, Senate, 1902."

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 15,000 copies of the full report of the Isthmian Canal Commission sent to Congress by the President, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Department of State, 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives. Such print shall include the text of said report and all appendixes and maps therewith sent to Congress. If any contract is necessary to be made for printing the maps, drawings, or plates accompanying said report, the Public Printer is authorized to receive and accept bids and proposals for such work, without advertising for the same. Said print shall be bound in substantial form, in cloth, and a copy, bound in half-leather, shall be for the personal use of each member of the present Congress, and for the heads of Departments.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 4,000 copies of the Annual Message of the President of the United States, communicated to both Houses of Congress on December 3, 1901.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of Senate Report No. 1, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, 2,000 for the use of the Senate and 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 73) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River near Fort Gibson, Ind. T.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, section 1, line 6, before the word "bridge," to strike out "fixed span," and on page 2, line 8, after the words "Secretary of War," to strike out the period and the word "And" and insert a semicolon and the word "and;" so as to make the section read:

That the Ozark and Cherokee Central Railway Company, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge across the Arkansas River, in the northwest quarter of section 21, township 15 north, range 19 east, Indian meridian. Said bridge shall be constructed in accordance with such plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War. Provided, That before the construction of any bridge herein authorized is commenced the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of such bridge and map of the location, giving sufficient information to enable the Secretary of War to fully and satisfactorily understand the subject; and unless the plan and location of such bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the structure shall not be built; and should any change be made in said bridge before or after completion, such changes shall likewise be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and any changes in said bridge which the Secretary of War may at any time deem necessary and order in the interests of navigation shall be made by the owners thereof at their expense.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 11, to add to section 1 the following proviso:

Provided further, That for the safety of vessels passing at night the owners of said bridge shall maintain thereon, at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was a section 2, on page 2, line 24, after the word "parties," to insert "and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to a telegraph and telephone companies;" so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owners of said bridge and any railroad company desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sums to be paid or the conditions to be observed, all matters at issue shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to a telegraph and telephone companies.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The article "a" should be stricken out of the amendment in line 1, on page 3, before the word "telegraph;" so as to read "shall be granted to telegraph and telephone companies."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, December 18, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and corrected. The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be approved.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of

Joint resolution (S. R. 21) authorizing the printing of extra copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. R. 21. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of extra copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, indefinitely, on account of important busi-

AMENDMENT OF THE DISTRICT CODE.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for immediate consideration, Senate joint resolution 22.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution which the Clerk will report to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of laws in the District of Columbia."

in the District of Columbia."

Resolved, etc., That the following amendment is hereby made to an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901:

Amend section 204 by striking out in the second line thereof the word "one" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two;" also by adding to said section the following:

"Provided, That all grand and petit juries in the supreme court of the District of Columbia and all petit juries in the police court of said District which shall have been organized or drawn under existing laws at the time this code goes into effect shall serve out their respective terms, and vacancies therein shall be filled under existing laws."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Pending the request, I would like to ask the gentleman what is meant by that resolution?

Mr. JENKINS. The resolution does not contemplate any change whatever. It merely permits the use of the juries that have already been drawn for the January term coming. If this resolution does not pass it will be impossible for them to have any item term for the reactive of January. jury term for the month of January.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if this resolution carries nothing but that one proposition?

Mr. JENKINS. Nothing but the proposition that I have stated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to offer an

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

It is hereby made the duty of every justice of the peace who shall retire from office when this code shall go into effect to deliver to the clerk of the supreme court of the District all dockets and original papers in cases which he may have had, whether closed or pending. Upon receipt by the clerk of the supreme court of the District of the dockets and original papers in cases above mentioned it shall be his duty to report to the supreme court of the District the receipt by him of the same, and the said court shall make proper rules and orders providing for the distribution and delivery of said dockets and papers amongst the justices to be appointed in pursuance of the provisions of this code, and the last-mentioned justices shall have jurisdiction to proceed in all pending causes so to be assigned to them respectively, and to render judgments and issue executions and attachments therein in the same manner and with like effect as if such actions had been instituted before them respectively. And no action pending before a justice of the peace at the time this code goes into effect shall abate, but such action shall not be tried or otherwise disposed of by the justice to whom it may be assigned until he has caused at least two days' notice of the time and place of trial to be served upon each party to the suit, or his attorney, or the parties or their attorneys agree in writing upon a time and place of trial.

It shall be the duty of every justice of the expiration of his commission, and in case of his death it shall be the duty of his executor or administrator, to deliver all dockets and all original papers in cases in the possession of such justice of the peace at the time of his resignation, removal, expiration of commission, or death to his successor in office.

Upon failure of any person to deliver such dockets and papers as in this section provided he shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500, to be recovered as other penalties are recovered. And every justice of the pe

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understood when the gentleman got unanimous consent for consideration he stated that there was nothing in it except the extension of the jury. Now, when the gentleman has obtained unanimous consent he proposes legislation about something else.

Mr. JENKINS. This is a very necessary amendment. Twenty-odd justices of the peace go out of office on the 1st of January, and ten other justices are appointed to take their places. There is no provision in the code adopted for the removal of causes pendis no provision in the code adopted for the removal of causes pending when the transfer takes place of the several justices of the peace who go out of office.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, has this been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. JENKINS. It has not. It has met the approval of the entire bench of the District; and, further, it is necessary to protect the rights of the parties who have suits pending. If the gentleman has got any objection, I will withdraw it. It is absolutely necessary to protect the rights of parties, and simply protects the rights of parties who have suits pending.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would have objected—I may have lost my opportunity now—if I understood the gentleman proposed to offer any new legislation.

Mr. JENKINS. Then I will withdraw the amendment, because I do not desire to take any advantage if the gentleman misunderstood me

The SPEAKER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

REVENUE FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the House bill temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I renew the request made yesterday morning that all gentlemen have leave to print for five days from to-day.

tions on the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill 5833, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the provisions of the measure imposing the tariff on commerce between Porto Rico and the United States were oppressive and outrageous. The provisions contained in this bill imposing a tariff on the commerce between the Philippine Islands and the United States are doubly cruel and oppressive. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee announced on yesterday that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States made the passage of this act necessary. Mr. Chairman, I deny that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered the passage of this bill necessary. That decision made it possible for the Republican majority in this House to pass the measure, but there was nothing in it holding that this legislation is necessary.

Only two days are allotted to pass this measure of vital interest to ten millions of people. Two weeks or a month would not be too much time for its discussion. The gentleman who presides over the Ways and Means Committee referred to the suffrage in the South. He referred to the "grandfather clause," as contained in some of the constitutions of the Southern States. After the Republicans have enacted such odious and infamous legislation against the natives of Porto Rico, and after proposing this cruel and outrageous wrong against the citizens of the Philippine Islands, such utterances are not in good taste, to say the least. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who fathers this legislation, has added a "stepmother clause" to it in proposing such treatment for our wards. There is not a State in all the South that would not accord better treatment to the meanest cur in that country than the Republican majority propose to give to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is this measure? Let us take it and discuss its details. The first section provides that the tariff customs, as established by the Philippine Commission, shall be reenacted by Congress. What are those tariff customs? They impose not only duties on all our goods going into the Philippine Islands from the United States, but upon all articles going into the Philippine Islands from all countries, and in addition to that they impose certain export duties on goods from the Philippine Islands. pose certain export duties on goods from the Philippine Islands to the United States. On page 45 of this act passed by the Philippine Commission, composed of a few men, by section 13 export duties are levied on rice, sugar, and tobacco, both manufactured and raw

This Philippine tariff act imposes duties upon articles exported from the Philippine Islands to the United States, and when they reach the United States the Dingley tariff bill imposes a further duty upon them as they come into the limits of the United States. I asked the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee on yesterday to tell why that duty was imposed upon the articles as they left the Philippines and why it was imposed against them when they came to the United States, and, with his usual custom, he evaded an answer. I ask him to-day, and the Republican majority in this House, Why is this double taxation imposed on commerce between the United States and the Philippine Islands. You have levied double taxation upon these people and yet talk about our expanding commerce and our beneficence to the inhabitants of that far-off country.

cable to the Philippines. Section 4 provides how the moneys shall be disposed of coming from duties that are levied in this act. It provides that they shall go for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee says for the free schools. Every man in this House knows that such a proposition as contained in section 4 is a snare and delusion. Why has this double taxation been imposed on the commerce of these islands? Every man who desires to give a fair and just answer knows that this bill was introduced and is to be put through this House to-day at the behest of the sugar trust, the tobacco trust, and certain corporate interests.

It is not for the benefit of the Filipinos, but to abuse and punish them. No living man believes that it is inspired by a philanthropic impulse toward them. The plain truth is that dollars and commercial greed are behind it. Then, why undertake to practice deceit and fraudulent pretenses upon the American people and the downtrodden inhabitants of that country?

It is idle nonsense to talk about this money going to the free schools in the Philippine Islands.

The distinguished gentleman said that we opposed the bill and yet we were not willing to propose a remedy. I propose to him a remedy now. We are spending over $100,000,000 each year to maintain our army in the Philippines, exclusive of the naval expenditures and the $20,000,000 paid for the islands. Instead of spending that vast sum, let us impose a revenue-tariff duty on all articles coming from other countries and going into the Philippine Islands. Let us give absolute free trade between the United States and that country. Let us impose internal-revenue taxes and other local taxes. Give the Filipinos the money coming from those sources, and then, if there be a deficit, appropriate the amount to cover it out of the National Treasury. That is your remedy, and you avoid this injustice to the people of that country.

Now, I want to advert for a moment or two to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the insular cases. have carefully read and reread that opinion. A majority of 5 to 4 rendered the decision. In it there is much talk of making "large concessions" under the Constitution to those who contend for the violation of that instrument. As a lawyer, I will answer that proposition by saying that the justice of the Supreme Court who takes an oath to support the Constitution and the laws of the United States should never be willing to make "any concession" doing violence to his oath and construing away that Constitution. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

stitution. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
One of the most learned associate justices took 42 pages to explain what the word "incorporate" means, or rather what it does not mean. In everyday parlance we understand the word "incorporate" to mean to take into the body, to make a part of the body, to constitute a "body politic."

The Foraker Act constituted in express language Porto Rico a "body politic." The Chief Justice and one of the learned associate justices had much to say in regard to the meaning of the word "incorporate." Permit me to quote what one of the most distinguished associate justices said in reference to the word "incorporate."

I am constrained to say that this idea of "incorporation" has some occult meaning which my mind does not comprehend. It is enveloped in some mystery which I am unable to unravel.

The word "incorporate" was contained in the treaty with Spain. The learned justice who took 42 pages to discuss the word "incorporate" was discussing the term as contained in the

The Chief Justice makes an observation in reference to the word "incorporate," and said:

Great stress is thrown upon the word "incorporation," as if possessed of some occult meaning.

Perhaps if the Chief Justice and the distinguished associate justice had stricken the word "incorporate" out of the opinion of the learned associate justice and inserted "sugar," it would have been made clear what was on his mind and the occultism discovered.

"Large concessions" are spoken of in that opinion, and with their discussion along this line I do not believe the country is familiar. The Republicans are now contending that by virtue of the country we have the power to govern territory we have the power to govern territory. familiar. The Republicans are now contending that by virtue of the right to acquire territory we have the power to govern terri-tory so acquired, outside of and beyond the Constitution. Here is the language of the majority of the Supreme Court on that proposition, and it is most startling:

If it be once conceded that we are at liberty to acquire foreign territory a presumption arises that our power with respect to such territories is the same power which other nations have been accustomed to exercise with respect to territories acquired by them.

The Supreme Court, with the assistance of the learned justice from Louisiana, announced that the United States has the same power to govern its territories as Germany, England, and all other countries of the world have with respect to their territorial possessions. Until this opinion was rendered, it was the belief of the people of this country that we had no such power as the British Parliament possesses. Yet now it is attempted by this act to boldly launch a colonial policy; and while it is said that this act is to provide temporarily for revenues for the Philippine Islands, it means a total and utter departure from the teachings and traditions which have heretofore governed us, and embracing colonialism as a permanency for the United States.

The English Parliament is all-powerful. It can pass any act. It can confiscate the property of every citizen. It can change the succession to the Crown. A great English law writer has thus portrayed the power of the British Parliament:

portrayed the power of the British Parliament:

It can make and unmake any and every law, change the form of government or the succession to the Crown, interfere with the course of justice, extinguish the most sacred private rights of the citizen. Between it and the people at large there is no legal distinction, because the whole plenitude of the people's rights and powers resides in it, just as if the whole nation were present in the chamber where it sits. In point of legal theory it is the nation, being the historical successor of the folkmote of our Teutonic forefathers. Both practically and legally it is to day the only and the sufficient depository of the authority of the nation, and is, therefore, within the sphere of law, irresponsible and omnipotent.

The Republican party has contended for such power in the Federal Government, and now, by "large concessions," the Supreme Court, by the narrow margin of one, has conceded it. What a monstrous doctrine for a Republic! It has ever heretofore been the American doctrine that this is a Government of enumerated and delegated powers by sovereign people of sovereign States. By "large concessions" the Supreme Court has construed away our Constitution and changed the Republic of our fathers to a colonial empire. And now the Supreme Court of the United States announces that Congress has the same power with reference to our dependencies.

Mr. Chairman, the following causes brought on the American Revolution: First, the passage of the stamp act in 1765, imposing a tax upon contracts, deeds, and other documents, requiring that a tax upon contracts, deeds, and other documents, requiring that they must be written or printed upon stamped paper furnished by an officer of the British Crown. Parliament asserted the right to thus tax the American colonies. In 1767, under the leadership of Sir Charles Townshend, chancellor of the exchequer, a tax was imposed upon paper, glass, painters' colors, and tea.

In 1773 the East India Company was permitted to bring tea into the colonies free, with the exception of a small duty of 3d. per pound at the port of entry. Let us not forget that the American colonies had friends and defenders in the British Parliament when these objectionable and odious measures were proposed. when these objectionable and odious measures were proposed. The Great Commoner rejoiced that we had resisted. The spark of self-respect and Anglo-Saxon independence burst into a glorious blaze of patriotism throughout the colonies, and our fathers resisted with suffering, blood, and treasure, with what effect no true American can ever forget.

In opposition to these three acts our forefathers entered upon

In opposition to these three acts our forefathers entered upon the revolutionary struggle, contending that the British Parliament had no power to tax us without representation; that it had no right to pass such acts. Upon our resistance to those acts we achieved our independence. I know it is fashionable now to forget and disregard history and to look only to the sordid idea of wealth—to the dollars and cents that are involved in these questions. But, sir, a decent respect for the historic self-sacrifice and patriotism of our noble ancestry forbids me to repudiate the causes for which they willingly sacrificed their blood.

Let us take up the subject of commerce with the Philippines

Let us take up the subject of commerce with the Philippines. Let us take up the subject of commerce with the Philippines. We will first consider tobacco. The United States in 1899 produced 719,847,857 pounds of tobacco. We exported 305,033,235 pounds. In 1899 the State of Kentucky produced 151.515,196 pounds, North Carolina about 80,000,000 pounds, and Virginia about 70,000,000 pounds. No Democrat from those great States is clamoring for this pitiful protection against the small amount of 14,430 tons of tobacco, and the cigars and cigarettes, valued at $2,451,326, exported from the Philippines.

From these figures it is perfectly manifest that the tobacco industry in those States and in this country are not menaced by the dustry in those States and in this country are not menaced by the small tobacco imports from the Philippines, and can never be. There is not the slightest defense for this heavy embargo upon the Philippine tobacco, levied both when it leaves that country and when it reaches here. These States produce more tobacco than has ever been or ever can be exported to the United States from the Philippine Islands. We permit the 7,000,000 pounds of tobacco from Porto Rico to come into this country free.

A gentleman on the other side [Mr. Grosvenor] asked yesterday beauther and the property of the property of day how the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], a member of the Ways and Means Committee, stood on this question. seems to me that the gentleman's signature to the views of the minority on this bill should completely answer that question, and the vote of old Virginia against the Porto Rican measure last Con-

the vote of old Virginia against the Porto Rican measure last Congress should answer his query. Those gentlemen are not asking for any protection against Philippine tobacco.

Let me refer in a most respectful way to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. Robertson], who spoke yesterday afternoon. He stated that free trade with the Philippine Islands meant the absolute destruction of the sugar industry in Louisiana. Let us examine that proposition. Louisiana produces 300,000 tons of sugar annually. Hawaii produces 300,000 tons; Porto Rico 100,000 tons. And we have free trade with Porto Rico and with Hawaii. In the year 1901 the Philippine Islands produced only 70,000 tons of sugar for export. Yet it is said that the sugar industry of Louisiana will suffer if we permit sugar to come in free from the Philippine Islands.

In 1901 the United States consumed 2,360,000 tons of sugar. Of this amount consumed we imported 1,957,661 tons. We did not this amount consumed we imported 1,957,661 tons. We did not produce one-third of what we consumed. And yet, with all the magnificent crop of sugar boasted by Louisiana, she supplicates that her 300,000 tons be protected against the pitiful exports of 70,000 tons from the Philippines. She stands here and, through some of her Representatives, asks that this double tax be imposed for her boxed. It is provident that the Philippines. for her benefit. It is manifest that the Philippines can never supply the needed amount of sugar that we must annually import.

The last speech of the lamented President McKinley appealed for reciprocity with Cuba to let her tobacco and sugar come into American markets. President Roosevelt in his message took up this appeal and warmly urges it. Secretary Root petitions for reciprocity with Cuba, and his report is brimful of the subject. You permit the 400,000 tons of Hawaiian and Porto Rican sugar to come in free. You are going to be reciprocal with Cuba and let in her 800,000 tons.

The Republicans are entering into treaties under the Dingley bill for further reciprocity with other countries on sugar and tobacco. The British possessions in the West Indies, Argentina, and other countries are to have reciprocal relations with us in reference to their tobacco and sugar products. And now, with all these things manifest, Louisiana and the United States must be protected against the 70,000 tons of sugar coming from the Philippines. It must be taxed as an export when it leaves there and taxed as an import when it reaches here. The tax must be effective, so it is doubled. Was ever so monstrous a doctrine contained in a tariff bill?

Let me commend this thought to the gentlemen from Louisiana. Two or three years ago we heard much of the expansion of our trade in the Far East; we heard much of a market for our cotton in the Philippine Islands and in other countries. This very tariff act, as proposed by the Philippine Commission and reenacted by act, as proposed by the Philippine Commission and reenacted by this bill, puts a prohibitory tariff upon the raw cotton and the products of cotton that go from Louisiana and Texas and other Southern States to the Philippine Islands. There was great discussion about the expansion of our trade in the Far East, yet by this act you impose a tariff that will absolutely destroy any sort of commerce between the South and the Philippine Islands.

Examine page 23 of the Customs Tariff for the Philippine Archipelago. I commend it to gentlemen from Louisiana and the South who prated about our late territorial extension meaning great commercial expansion for the United States, and especially approached the South who prated about our late territorial extension meaning great commercial expansion for the United States, and especially the states and especially the states are sent to the states of the states and especially the states are stated to the states and especially the states are stated to the stated ing great commercial expansion for the United States, and especially for the cotton, rice, and grain growing States. On this page cially for the cotton, rice, and grain growing States. On this page a high tax is imposed on raw cotton and cotton products. On page 37 a similar tax is imposed on rice. The same tax is applied to wheat, corn, and other grain. What do Louisiana and other Southern States say to being met with this inhospitable protective tariff when their products reach the Philippines? What now of commercial expansion and trade for the South? It is said that free trade with these islands will destroy our rice industry, and especially that of Louisiana.

Porto Rico and the Philippines import rice! They can not raise enough for home consumption. The only damage to Louisiana enough for home consumption. The only damage to Louisiana and other rice States comes from the embargo in this bill against our rice exports to the Philippines. Hence the benefit that Louisiana, Texas, and other Southern States would derive from free trade with those islands in our cotton, rice, and grain products will far outweigh the small advantage of protection given in this act. Louisiana produces about 180,000,000 pounds of rice annually, South Carolina about 29,000,000, and Texas this year 2,400,000 sacks of rough rice. Texas produced more rice than South Carolina and Louisiana. South Carolina and Texas are not asking for protection against Philippine rice. We spurn such an advantage. Give us free markets there and elsewhere, and we ask no more

We have heard much boasting of how our commerce would increase if we would annex these islands. After three years here is the magnificent result of our trade expansion there, according to the returns at the War Department:

TRADE WITH THE PHILIPPINES—THREE GREAT POWERS MADE LARGER GAIN THAN THE UNITED STATES.

A comparative statement of the commerce of the Philippine Islands for the fiscal year 1901 and 1900, prepared in the Division of Insular Affairs of the War Department, shows that the total value of merchandise imported during the fiscal year 1901 was $90,379,406, as against $20,601,436 for the fiscal year 1901; and the total value of merchandise exported during the fiscal year 1901 was $23,314,948, as against $19,751,068 for the fiscal year 1900, an increase of 47 per cent in the value of imports and an increase of 17½ per cent in the value of exports.

The value of imports of merchandise from the United States was $2,855,685, an increase of 72.4 per cent over the previous year; of the United Kingdom, $6,956,145, increase 76.3 per cent; of Germany, $2,135,252, increase 76.5 per cent, and of France $1,683,923, increase 246.7 per cent.

The value of exports of merchandise to the United States was $2,572,021, a decrease of 27 per cent; United Kingdom, $10,704,741, increase 72 per cent; Germany, $81,526, decrease 16.3 per cent; France, $1,934,256, increase 38.9 per cent.

This trade even will be totally destroyed by the present act. These figures show that instead of the commerce of the United States with the Philippines increasing it has greatly decreased. If gentlemen will take the trouble to consult the figures they will find from the statistics of the Treasury Department that since our acquisition of these new possessions our commerce with countries where we own not a foot of ground has increased in a much greater ratio than it has in any country acquired by reason of the recent war.

Examine these statistics, and you will find that our commerce with Great Britain has increased in a greater ratio, as well as our commerce with France and Germany and many other nations, thus showing no necessity of owning a country in order to trade with its people. From these figures and from our recent history it is indisputably shown that trade expansion does not follow territorial extension. The only honorable course for America to pursue is to establish absolute free trade with the Philippines.

The Supreme Court has just said in the Diamond Rings cases:

The Philippines thereby ceased, in the language of the treaty, "to be Spanish." Ceasing to be Spanish, they ceased to be foreign country. They came under the complete and absolute sovereignty and dominion of the United States, and so became territory of the United States over which civil government could be established. The result was the same, although there was no stipulation that the native inhabitants should be incorporated into the body politic, and none securing to them the right to choose their nationality. Their allegiance became due to the United States and they became entitled to its protection.

Then if the Philippines came under our "sovereignty" let us treat them as sovereigns. If "their allegiance became due to the United States and they became entitled to its protection," as Chief Justice Fuller said in these cases, we should reward their "allegiance" by extending protection to our "sovereigns" in the form of free trade. Under this doctrine they are entitled to come hither without let or hindrance and bring their products and merchan-dise with them. My voice and vote shall ever be to let them come free forever while they are a part of us and owe the United States allegiance.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] said that the Democratic party had lashed the Republican party into this war with Spain. He admitted frankly that the Democratic party had brought on the war, and he said now we should stand up with the Republican party and undertake to solve these questions, or else we should have voted against the declaration of war. I am frank to say that if I had not believed the solemn pledge to the Cuban people contained in our declaration of war would be executed to the letter by every Representative in this House and officer of this Government, and if I had my vote to cast again, I would cast it against the declaration of war.

If I had known that we were to violate every pledge made to the Cubans; if I had known that we were to pillage and plunder the inhabitants of the island of Porto Rico; if I had known that we were to enact such measures as this, and that a horde of officials were to be sent to the Philippine Islands to plunder and outrage those people, I should have voted against it. But I, in in common with other Democrats, believed that when we freed the Cubans, when our purpose had been accomplished, the war would cease, and that no commercial spirit or greed would enter into our motives or our actions. We a tion here to-day with the Republicans. We are ready to solve the ques-

If they will levy a revenue tariff against the imports from other countries into the Philippines and appropriate the balance of the money to pay the expenses incurred in the Philippine Islands, I will vote for that sort of proposition. My contention is and shall be that national honor demands that we should aid the Filipinos to establish a stable government, declare for their independence after that, and then guarantee to them that no outside nation

The American people will not tolerate such measures as this. They will not be deceived by promises of expansion of trade and commerce while the Republican party forthwith enters an embargo against all commerce between this country and our new possessions. In the face of this bill such promises are rank hypocrisy. The American people have not demanded this law. It is inspired by commercial interests, corporations, and trusts.

On the 1st day of November, 1765, the day set for the stamp act to take effect in the American colonies, great processions were formed by our forefathers, the bells were tolled, and the Goddess of Liberty was buried.

When the message is flashed to the inhabitants of the far-off Philippines that this act has passed we can imagine piteous processions of the people forming there; we can almost hear the dolorous tones of their tolling bells as they solemnly prepare to perform the ceremony of the reburial of the Goddess of Liberty, resurrected by our noble ancestry at Bunker Hill and Yorktown. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] be recognized for thirty minutes

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WIL-The CHAIRMAN.

LIAMS] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, my view of this Philippine question is very simple. It is this: That as long as the Philippine Archipelago is a part of the United States—"within the domain of the Union"—it ought to be treated as a part of the United States, with that equality and that uniformity of legislation which has characterized our past legislative dealings with the Territories of the United States. Secondly, in order to avoid the hardships, difficulties, and seeming impossibilities of that proposition, we ought to get rid of the Philippine Islands as soon as we possibly can do so honorably to ourselves and with any degree of benefit to the inhabitants of the islands. As old Cato finished every speech with the sentence, "Carthage must be destroyed," so I would have every American utterance, until the result is accomplished, close with the words, Philippines must be lopped off from the American body politic."

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill is but putting in force the policy which was inaugurated in the Porto Rican tariff bill, and which every Republican upon the stump, from Texas to Maine, during the last campaign, said was a "temporary measure, providing in itself for its own cessation." Against the Democratic contention that it was the permanent policy of the Republican party, all Re-

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the decisions of the Supreme Court. Ever since the Republican precedent of criticism of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case, that has been "bad form," and has now, as I understand, become "anarchy!" Great is the Supreme Court, Mr. Chairman! Especially when it reaches its decisions by a shifting majority of one. Great is the Supreme Court! greater than anything under our Government, because it is above our Government. It constitutes the sovereign power itself. It is greater than two-thirds of Congress and three-fourths of the States, because it can "amend" the Consti-tution of the United States by consultative "construction."

Mr. Chairman, up to recently it was my idea that it was the glory of a court that whenever the judges retired into a consultation or decision room they went under a portal above which were inscribed the words; "Italex scripta est" (Thus is the law written); and I thought it to be the glory of a judge that he bent not the written law, especially the fundamental law-the Constitution of the United States—to passing and pressing political necessities, or to "new conditions." But a new theory has come into life. Professor Bryce, admiring the elastic unwritten consti-tutional system of Great Britain, thought he had discovered an equal elasticity in American institutions.

Living under an unwritten constitution capable of adapting itself to meet new conditions, he thought he was eulogizing the American system when he announced that the American Constitution was such that it possessed a sort of self-amendatory character in the power of construction residing in the United States Supreme Court. He did not realize that he was merely accusing the judges of perjury. Reading these late decisions between the lines, I find that some of the judges of the court themselves are affected with this opinion. They say that the forefathers did not "realize" or "provide for" this "condition" or that or the other; and or " that therefore the letter of the Constitution must bend to the "necessities" of the time.

I have been raised to believe that the glory of a judge consisted in the fact that he said: "Thus is the law written, and my sworn duty is simply to construe it. I have nothing to do with its policy; I have nothing to do with its consequences. This is the Constitution, and under my oath my duty is to maintain it." In fact, the tion, and under my oath my duty is to maintain it." In fact, the only oath that an American citizen ever takes, Mr. Chairman, the only oath taken by you or me or the President or a judge on the bench, is to "maintain the Constitution of the United No American citizen has ever been required to take an oath to maintain even the Government of the United States. may become the duty of American citizens, under the American theory, to overthrow the Government, if the Government is overthrowing the Constitution. That is the oath to-day of every citizen who is sworn.

Neither am 1 going to attempt to explain the decisions of the Supreme Court, because, Mr. Chairman, that would be something like contempt of court upon my part. It would be to arrogate to myself an ability not possessed by the Supreme Court itself. Fourteen Philadelphia lawyers, in whom supreme wisdom is supposed to be reposed, could not do that. I have considered these decisions as best I could, and I find the one consistent thread running through them is the decision announced by the Chief Justice and his three associates, possessing the brains of the court. I am not going to undertake to harmonize these decisions, but they are about this: That Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands are a part of the United States; and then, again, that Porto Rico and the Philippines, or Porto Rico at any rate, is not a part of the United States. Now you see it, and now you don't; a sort of thimblerig jumble of legalities.

Sometimes it is a part and sometimes it is outside; sometimes it is domestic and sometimes it is foreign. A new sort of citizenship has been discovered. We now have "appurtenant citizens." It depends simply upon what seems to be the best policy, in the opinion of the court, to be pursued with regard to our insular possessions, without reference to the old, written, inelastic, absolute, oath-bound Constitution of the United States as a fixed instrument, but referring to it only as an instrument to be made to bend to political necessities and "new conditions," as they may arise. But one thing is clear from the decisions arrived at by this shifting majority of one, and that is that in the view of the Supreme Court this bill, if it is passed, is constitutional; that Congress has, in the opinion of a majority of the court, the power to pass this very bill of iniquities with which you and I are faced.

But, Mr. Chairman, it was the great Edmund Burke himself who, in answer to an argument of that sort in the British House of Commons, when it was urged that Parliament had the power to tax the American colonies, responded in effect: "Aye, they have the power. That I admit. So the shepherd has power to shear his sheep in midwinter; but he would be a foolish shepherd, and in addition to that he would be cruel, barbarous, and inhuman, if he overgized the power."

The Democratic contention is no longer that we have not the ower—the constitutional power, the bare legal power—to do his. That is not now the question. The question which now directs itself to the Democratic conscience, and ought to direct itself to the American conscience everywhere, is this: "Is thy serv-ant a dog to do this thing?" Admit the power. Is it wise policy, is it just, is it right, is it equitable, is it equality, is it uniformity to do what this bill requires?

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are but two possible theories, so far as I can see, of colonialism. One is the old British mercantile system, which even the British Parliament, operating under an unwritten constitution, with all power, as Blackstone said, except to make a man a woman or a woman a man, has long deserted as unfair, unjust, and unequal. That old mercantile colonialism is not in existence, so far as England is concerned, now. She became ashamed of it long ago. Somebody said here yesterday that he did not want the United States to become a "mother country." You need have no fear, gentlemen. There seems to be a disposition to make it a sort of step-mother country. There seems to be no idea on that side of the Chamber that we shall become anything like a "mother country" to anybody anywhere. [Applause on the Democratic side.

The old mercantile theory of colonization, which was killed in England when the mercantile theory itself was killed by Adam Smith, was still maintained by Portugal and by Spain until we robbed Spain only yesterday of her power to maintain it any longer. It is now maintained by Holland in Java and her East Indian possessions. You may take that theory or the other theory. What is the other? It is the modern British theory; it is the traditional American theory—a theory under which we acted in dealing with all the Territories of this country since the formation of the Government; and it is a mistake not to remember that when we formed the Government itself we had Territories, and we formed

That theory is not one of commercial exploitation of the colony for the benefit of the mother country; it is the theory of carrying our flag and our institutions wherever they can properly be placed, and if we get temporarily into a country to which they can not properly be extended—where racial differences, alienism and hostility, differences of religion, and a thousand other things prevent their being extended—then to get out of that country just as soon as we can.

Which one of these two theories are you going to take? You can't take both. You must legislate under one or the other.

There are two theories of legislation also, and you must take one or the other; you can not take both. One is the old, time-honored, traditional, Democratic theory of spreading our institutions and our population with them, because without the popula-tion as a base you can not sustain the institutions, to countries fit for breeding and perpetuating a population of white men. That is our theory—the Democratic theory. Ah, but somebody says that the Spooner resolution, which was adopted for the governance of the Philippines only, followed out the Democratic precedent in the time of Thomas Jefferson, when the Louisiana Territory was acquired. A greater falsehood than that was never uttered

If gentlemen will take the trouble to read the resolution in which Congress gave Jefferson the power to govern the Louisiana Territory in the interim between the Spanish surrender and our getting there, and will take the trouble to read the Spooner resolution, they will find the difference to consist in the very soul of the two resolutions—the intent of conferring the power and in the prescribed manner of its exercise

There was an attempt at imitation, but let us see what it amounted to. The Jefferson resolution went on to vest in the President "all the military, civil, and judicial powers." So much of it is literally repeated in the Spooner resolution. Following up the Jefferson resolution, see what it says:

All the military, judicial, and civil powers exercised by the officers of the ceded province.

In other words, merely continuing the municipal and domestic laws of the country until new officers could be sent and new laws could be made by the Congress of the United States. What is the Spooner resolution on that subject? Instead of vesting "all military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by officers" already recognized—instead of vesting the operation of the mere municipal and domestic laws, known laws, it goes on to say "all military, civil and judicial powers recessary to govern the Philippines. pal and domestic laws, known laws, it goes on to say "all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippines, in such person or persons as the President shall direct;" and it adds that the power shall be exercised "for the establishment of a civil government," thereby making the President a legislative officer. The italics are mine. Not only that, but it enables him to go further and, violating the old maxim delegatus non potest delegare, create new subexecutive officers with legislative powers.

There was nothing of that sort attempted in the Leffarson resource.

There was nothing of that sort attempted in the Jefferson reso-Now, as to the manner of the exercise of the power conferred, what did the Jefferson resolution say? That the President in his manner-mark the words-in his manner of exercising these powers should be controlled by the aim-of "maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion."

In the Spooner resolutions the manner was to be "in such manner as the President shall direct," for the establishment of a government, and then the rest.

Why, a fool who could only run and read could tell the differ-why, a fool who could only run and read could ten the difference between the souls of these two methods, for the manner of the exercise is the soul of the legislation, and—

Mr. McCLEARY. Did the gentleman from Mississippi quote the whole of the Spooner resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I just quoted the part fixing the character of power conferred and the manner of its

I quote from an intelligent writer the following commentary on the distinction, patent to anybody not blindly biased:

Congress thereby enacted, in effect, that the former Spanish and French laws, excepting always and of course those forbidden by our Constitution, shall be the laws of the new acquisition till Congress made others. Jefferson was commanded to supervise the execution of the enactment.

Repudiating the theory of constitutional law contended for by the Federalists in 1803, there was in March, 1801, inserted in the pending Army bill an amendment, popularly known as "the Spooner amendment," which repeated in an enlarged way the imputed unconstitutionality of the emergency statute of 1803 by placing "all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippines, until otherwise provided by Congress, in such person and persons, and to be exercised in such manner as the President shall direct." All civil powers necessary to govern the Philippines!

In that sense the law of 1901 goes beyond that of 1803. The character and magnitude of the new departure since the war of invasion of Cuba can be discerned in the difference between the two laws. The former confined Jefferson to the execution of existing and known ordinances and decrees, but the fatter covered the whole field of "establishment of civil government" in the Philippines which Governor Taft is now exploiting, and did not enact any rule whatever for the archipelago. It attempted to give to Mr. McKinley full power to legislate, a power not imparted to Jefferson. It made Mr. McKinley full power to legislate, a power not imparted to Jefferson. It made Mr. McKinley is unrestrained will (the Administration contention is that the Constitution is impotent to control in an unincorporated territory) the basis of legislative power in the Philippines."

One of them dictates a manner in which the power shall be exercised, to wit in accordance with our institutions and "for maintaining and protecting" the rights of the inhabitants; the other dictates a manner, too, but it is to be "such manner as the President shall direct for the establishment of a government."

Mr. McCLEARY. Is not that language followed by other language.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No, sir; it is not. In your own time you may try to prove it is, if you can. Fourteen Philadelphia lawyers (and they are said to be the shrewdest lawyers on the face of the earth) could not prove it. It is true that the language of the Jefferson resolution is repeated where possible, and the attempt is thereby sought to be made that the intent is the same

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read the entire Spooner resolutions?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have it not by me. I should

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have it not by hie. I should be very glad to read it if I had. I am reading a quotation from it. Mr. MORRIS. I thought so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But that part which I read is quoted absolutely right. I will get the entire resolutions and insert them in the Record, so that the gentleman may read the language side by side; and I will by italics show wherein they differ from one another, and no schoolboy in this country who is not a fool can fail to see the difference when he compares them. Here are the resolutions:

THE DEADLY PARALLEL.

That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said territories be sconer made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Approved October 31, 1808.

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Approved March 2, 1901. Approved March 2, 1901.

Compare them in the respects to which I have called attention. Compare them also in this respect, that the Jefferson resolution is for a fixed and prescribed time, to wit, "until the expiration of the present session of Congress," or sooner; the Spooner resolution fixes no date for the termination of the imperial power conferred, nor any contingency even, except the indefinite and vague one, "until otherwise provided by Congress."

And that is not all. Even if these resolutions were exactly the same, even if they were identical, it is an historical fact that the power vested in Jefferson was exercised in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States and was intended from the first and always to be so exercised; and it is an historical fact that in this very bill you propose to take advantage of the latitude allowed you by the late decisions of the Supreme Court not to do that very thing, and that you have never so much as professed an intent so to govern the islands. Mr. Chairman, there are but two theories, and gentlemen must take one or the other.

These two theories, as I have said, are, first, the old Democratic traditional theory of managing the Territories and the public domain of the Union, and the other is the new-fangled, recently born, new-fledged Republican theory that Congress is to act as the British Parliament used to act, and as Spain acted toward her colonies for the purpose of making them "pay" the mother country, hes for the purpose of making them "pay" the mother country, if you take the commercial view of it, or at best for the purpose of doling out as a matter of "generosity," not of justice and right, such "liberties" as you "in your discretion" think the inhabitants of the islands ought to have. In other words, this new-fangled theory is one of plenary, absolute, unrestrained, constitutionally unrestricted, and therefore imperialistic power. Which one of these doctrines are you going to adopt?

This is a grave day for the American people. This has been a grave question for the American people to consider. I am not one of those who would belittle the difficulties that lie in your way. I think it is impossible, in the long run, to extend to an alien race of the character of the Filipinos American institutions and expect them to mount to the height of civilization through those institutions to which we have mounted. I believe that God made the races different, just as he made certain animals of the same genus different; and although different races of people—brown men and black men and yellow men and white men-all belong to the genus homo, just as asses and zebras and horses belong to the genus equus, or the equine genus, yet they have separate characteristics, and they work out their own salvation, if they work it out at all, through separate and distinct instrumentalities. Because they are not capable of our sort of self-government is no reason why they ought not to have their sort of self-government—no reason why they ought not to have, at least, autonomy.

The tool that suits one is not the tool that suits the other; that other would perhaps be incapable of using it without hurting himself.

But the lesson to be drawn from all this is not the one which gentlemen on the other side would draw. It is this: If you can not carry the American body-politic—if you can not carry the American soul-politic, which is a greater thing—to peoples anywhere on the surface of this globe in its full plenary significance, glory, strength, and splendor, let those peoples alone; let them alone in the interest of the perpetuity, strength, and symmetry of your own institutions.

Now, gentlemen, let us test this bill under these two theories; first, under the historical Democratic theory. The first clause of this bill is objectionable and why?

On this point I ask the attention of members, because I believe with Patrick Henry that it is from the past that men get light upon the pathway of the future. What is the history of our Government with regard to legislation like this? Why, gentlemen, it is a fact known to every student of American history that the chief object of the formation of the American Union was to present differences in gentlement of the American Union was to present differences in gentlement. vent differences in customs duties, differences in commercial laws between the colonies—to prevent the obstruction of commerce at State lines throughout the confederacy by divergent local enact-ments—a policy at that time not only threatened but put into operation in two or three ports of the United States. That was the immediate occasion of the formation of the American Union.

What has been the secret, my friends, of the magnificent commercial supremacy which we enjoy to-day? I hear somebody say that it is "protection" against the world outside our limits. That is not true. The secret of our progress and our commercial su-premacy lies in that magnificent system of free trade, unexcelled in its magnitude, unexcelled in its fullness, between the different parts of the Union—an absolutely unencumbered and unobstructed commerce from Maine to California and from the State of Washington to Florida, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Canada line to where the beautiful Gulf bathes the shores of the State of Mississippi. This has been the secret of our industrial success

If we had had the sort of government that this bill would give us—although gentlemen tell us that this system can not be extended to the States (thank God, Mr. Chairman, for that reserva-tion)—what would we have had? We would have had all the commerce of this great country obstructed at every State line as it passed from one State to another. We would have had the commerce of the world coming into our ports from foreign countries meeting with one import duty at New York and another at Jacksonville, one at San Francisco, and still another at Philadel-The object of the formation of our Government was commercial freedom. The secret of our progress has been commercial freedom within this magnificent area—an area never excelled in the history of the world in size or in diversity and wealth of resources by any area devoted to freedom of trade.

Now, from the Democratic standpoint, of course we can not agree, according to our theory—the theory which we believe was the basis of the formation of our Government and the secret of our progress—to the idea contained in the first clause of this bill, that an Executive commission in the Philippine Archipelago shall be vested with a power which our ancestors refused to leave to the sovereign States themselves—the power to fix one import duty at one port under the flag and another import duty at another port under the flag.

My friends, think of it a moment! The great State of New York, with its millions of inhabitants, with its intelligent population, with its great capacity for self-government, has not been permitted to do this thing. Yet you ask that we shall vote to permit an Executive commission-whether their conduct is approved by act of Congress or not makes no difference-to exercise this great arbitrary power which was refused to the State of New York and to "the mother of States and statesmen," Virginia.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a question, because I desire his opinion upon it, as I have a very high regard for him and his opinions. He has intimated to us by his argument, if he has not directly asserted, that the commercial ascendency of our nation is largely due to the free intercourse between the States—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I said, between the different parts of the Union. I did not confine my remarks to the States.

Mr. COUSINS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he does not think that after all the protection that has been given to American labor, enabling it to contribute largely to the expansion of American commerce and the promotion of American progress, has done more in this direction than any other cause that the gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go into a general discussion of the theories of protectionism and free trade. This is not the occasion for such a discussion, nor has it a direct bearing upon the question now at issue. Of course the gentleman from Iowa understands that he and I are as far removed as pole from pole in our view of what he would call the blessings, and what I would call the curses, of protectionism.

Mr. COUSINS. I would not wish to divert the gentleman from his argument.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The second clause of this bill is obnexious from the Democratic standpoint to the objection that it puts up a commercial barrier in the ports of continental America against the products and industries of insular America. I need not dwell on that. The clause which makes a difference in the coasting laws of the United States is also obnoxious to objection, because it, too, is lacking in the virtues which constitute good law—equality and uniformity.

I was glad to hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor], for whose opinion I have a very high regard on matters of this sort, say yesterday that he hoped this clause would not be necessary very long; that he trusted our ships were now, or would soon be, able to carry our trade from the Pacific ports to the insular ports, and that, therefore, this provision of the bill might possibly be omitted in the Senate. I hope he is right. I shall be thankful if he prove to be so. I have reached a point where I thank God for little bits of legislative good. Whenever I get from the American Congress little bits of possible uniformity or equality or equity in legislation, however small, I feel like having a thanksgiving day on my own account, and rendering thanks to God that he has molded conditions so that political necessity does not require

Now, my friends, I have discussed the provisions of this bill from the Democratic standpoint. How about the Republican standpoint? Why, sir, from that point of view the bill is equally obnoxious. If you propose to follow in the pathway of Spain and Portugal, if you are going to imitate Holland in Java and Sumatra, if you are going to do what Great Britain did years ago, when she did not have as much sense as she has to-day (and we taught her the main part of the sense she has learned on this question, or our ancestors did), even from the standpoint of "commercial exploitation," this is a bad and foolish bill.

Why, Mr. Chairman, all over the Southern land, men here and there, caught with the old glamour of military "glory" and governmental "splendor" and governmental "prestige," and the vision of a flag somewhere upon the island peaks of the ocean bowing salutation to the flag upon the top of the Capitol—men thus carried from their moorings-attempted to justify the position in favor of Philippine annexation and retention which they had taken by saying that it was a great "commercial expansion" and that we were going to find "new markets in the Orient" for the goods of the United States, and especially for the cotton and the cotton goods of the South. There were men foolish enough to listen to the siren voice for a moment.

I remember well saying in a letter that I wrote to a friend at that time: "You may think that there will be something in the way of larger and freer markets to redeem this otherwise bad policy, as you say; but if you believe that the Constitution of the United States, as you and I understand it, and as the courts have hith-erto construed it, or anything else, is going to stand in the way of this devouring creature of protectionism, which the Republican party worships as a fetich, you are very much mistaken. The Republican party will find a method somehow or somehow else to make written laws bend, and to sweep the rigid Constitution itself out of the way, if it happens to stand in the way of the theory of protectionism. You will get no free markets there."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have fifteen minutes remaining, and I am physically unable to use the time myself. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes additional.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, I wish to reserve at least three minutes of that time in order to enable my colleague [Mr. CANDLER] to be recognized, and I will thank the gentleman to keep track of it for me.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection to that, and I will yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They said we were going to have all these new markets. What does this bill do? It will not do to take the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Payne] yesterday that we are reducing duties here, or to compare the Spanish duties with our proposed duties, as he did. The gentleman knows that is not the condition that is facing us. He knows that right now, under the last decision of the Supreme Court, in the Fourteen Diamonds case, there are no duties at all, and every duty put on here is an increase of duty and not a reduc-

Mr. PAYNE. Which decision of the Supreme Court has declared that any of these duties imposed in the Philippine Islands are unconstitutional?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, well, the decision of the Supreme Court, although it was not directly upon that question, was to this effect, that as long as there was no special act of Congress applicable directly to them inaugurating these duties, the Philippines were not to be treated as a foreign country and were a part of the United States for the general purposes of com-merce, and that therefore there could be no Dingley tariff rates collected on their goods at our ports; and with it there necessarily went the converse of the proposition, that if the Government of the United States could not collect duties on products from the Philippines to continental America, a fortiori a commission in the Philippine Islands could not collect duties upon goods from continental to insular America. I take it for granted that that followed.

Now they said we would get all of these "expanding mar-kets." Why, what do I find here? I find that instead of giving the farmers of the United States a free market over there, this bill taxes everything that the farmer can possibly ship, and the things that he is right now shipping to the Philippine Islands. Even from the standpoint of commercial exploitation your bill is not a wise bill. You tax our wheat and flour and corn and meal and cotton and cotton seed and cotton-seed oil and cotton goods and cotton mixed goods of every sort, and silk and hemp, and nearly everything else shipped by us to the Philippines. So that here is that "great market in the Orient" that our people were invited to take charge of, here it is free to them, given gratuitously under this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and you come in with this bill and you say that that condition of free access of our goods shall cease. Why, even Spain, poor, old, despotic, foolish Spain, in her worst days allowed free access for the products of the mother country to the colonies, whatever she might have done with regard to colonial products when shipped to the mother country.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The gentleman from Mississippi compares the policy under this bill to the policy under Spain and Portugal. Did Spain and Portugal give up the yield of their tariffs for the benefit of the islands, as is done in this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman did not misunderstand me. I say there is a similarity in kind. I would be no means insult my country, even under a Republican legislamisunderstand me. I say there is a similarity in kind. I would by no means insult my country, even under a Republican legislative administration, of partial laws, unequally administered, by saying that it was identical in degree. There is no doubt about the fact that Spain did worse than we have done, wrought even more selfishly in some respects; but in this particular of taxing the products of the home country attempting to find a market in the colonial countries, even Spain sets us no example. Great Britain never did it. Portugal never did it. The blackest hours of colonialism payer witnessed a period when men did not have sense nialism never witnessed a period when men did not have sense nialism never witnessed a period when men did not have sense enough to know that if they were going in for commercial exploitation the first thing they wanted was a free market in the colonies for the products of the mother country.

Now, let me go a step further. From the Republican standpoint, in another way, this is not a good bill. I leave it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Pavne] if this assertion is not absolutely true: If you had the constitutional right and power to levy duties of 10 or 20 per cent upon goods coming into the Philippines from foreign countries then you also had the right to ippines from foreign countries, then you also had the right to levy no duties at all upon the products of foreign countries coming to the Philippines? I take it the gentleman will admit that.

Thus you could have maintained open ports in the Philippines, if you had desired to do so.
